Ex-RCMP Ride Herd On Debtors

VANCOUVER (CP)—A debt collection agency staffed mainly by retired RCMP officers has been established by the provincial government to deal with people who don't pay their provincial fines.

The collection agency is a branch of the attorney-general's department called the civil enforcement of fines division.

It started operating in Vancouver just over three weeks ago and has already collected more than $700 in fines owing on violations of provincial statutes.

The division, which does not deal with Criminal Code matters, was created because of changes last year in the Summary Convictions Act.

Under the revised legislation, judges normally cannot jail persons convicted of breaking provincial or municipal laws. If offenders default on their fines, they must be sued in civil court for debt.

Lorne Newson, chief enforcement officer for the division, said people who can pay their fines but haven't done so will be taken to small claims court if they do not comply with the requests of his staff.

If he refuses to pay at that stage, he can be ordered by the court to be jailed for up to 10 days. He also could be billed the $20-a-day cost of incarceration in addition to the fine.

Newson, who retired as an RCMP sergeant in 1974 after 20 years' service in B.C., said the division will endeavor to be compassionate with persons having genuine difficulty in paying their fines and will probably only go the jail route with stubborn defaulters who are able to pay.

Newson said he doubts the money collected by the division will meet the cost of collecting it, "We will be prepared to spend a reasonable number of man hours in some cases to collect even the smallest of fines because we cannot leave the impression with people who would exploit a given situation that there would be no effort to enforce a judgment against them."

However, Newson added, the new system should create a saving because it will still be considerably less expensive than the old system of immediately incarcerating persons who left their fines unpaid.

Newson's staff consists of administrative personnel and three enforcement officers who are retired RCMP staff sergeants.

The enforcement officers are Nelson Hindle, who wound up his 28-year career with the RCMP in Chilliwack, Bud Domay, who was last stationed as a staff sergeant in North Vancouver, and Norm Adolph, latterly of Prince Rupert.

Newson said there is only about $1,000 owing in unpaid bylaw fines in Vancouver, while a rough estimate of monies owing in the Lower Mainland in unpaid fines relating to provincial laws has been put at more than $150,000.

The new division comes under the Justice Development Commission and will be co-ordinated with other government services.

Alta. Budget Bonanza For Elderly

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta senior citizens have been guaranteed the highest minimum monthly income given to the elderly in Canada and taxpayers in the oil-rich province have been promised the lowest personal provincial income taxes in the country.

The moves are contained in the Progressive Conservative government's 1975-76 budget tabled in the legislature Friday night, a $2.536-billion spending program essentially the same as the pre-election budget earlier this year. The budget brought down prior to the March 26 election, in which the Conservatives swept 69 of 75 legislative seats, died on the order paper when the vote was called.

The major change is the provision that single pensioners over the age of 65 who get the federal old-age pension and income supplement will be guaranteed a $255 minimum income for individuals, but the government reviewed that level during and after the election campaign.

Provincial Treasurer Merv Leitch, presenting his first budget since taking over the portfolio from Gordon Miniely in a post-election cabinet shuffle, said senior citizens in the province will get an "appreciably higher level of support" than their counterparts in other provinces. Spokesmen in his department said the $240 guarantee in B.C. was the highest before Alberta boosted its level.

The elderly will also benefit through an $18-million program of extended health-care benefits and increases in renter assistance grants.

Indians Occupy Offices

NANAIMO (CP) — A group of native Indians Friday occupied the offices of the federal department of Indian affairs, about 20 to 30 of them peacefully watching educational films while another 10 or 15 carried placards outside.

Department staff left the offices shortly after the natives arrived in the offices, the second time this month they have conducted a sit-in.

The move is part of a province-wide move to get the provincial and federal governments to negotiate native land claims.

Meanwhile in Ottawa Indian Affairs Minister Judd Buchanan said he is sympathetic to demands by B.C. Indian bands for greater responsibility over their own affairs.

He told a news conference he would be ready to go to B.C. late next month and discuss what new areas the Indians might take over from Indian affairs employees.

B.C. GOV'T STUDY IN VANCOUVER

Food Probe Launched

VANCOUVER (CP) — The provincial government-appointed British Columbia Advisory Food Council has launched an investigation into food costs and pricing in the greater Victoria area.

Wayne Wickens, council secretary, said Friday it would be conducted by Robin Smith Consultants Ltd. of Richmond and "will involve a study of what happens to the food after it leaves the farm, what the raw product costs, storage costs, packaging costs, retail labor costs, interest on investment and so on."

He said commodities to be studied are beef, pork, chicken, turkey, eggs, milk. It will include how prices for these commodities are arrived at when sold to area consumers.

He said the investigation is an information study and the preliminary report is expected to be ready in about two months.

The study resulted from a meeting earlier this month between Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich and food industry officials, who told the minister they were worried about labor demands in B.C. processing firms.

The producers said that recent wage settlements in the industry have provided for wage increases of up to 80 per cent over two years with fringe benefits that were equivalent to as much as 30 cents an hour.

They warned that increased wages would mean a reduction in processing of labor-intensive crops such as fresh fruit, and if this happened, foods produced by B.C. would be replaced by products from other areas.

The said the 1974 comparative average wages for the fruit and vegetable processing industry in Canada showed B.C. paid the highest wage of $3.95 an hour, compared with a national average of $3.60.

Bruce Wisbey, vegetable horticulturist for the B.C. department of agriculture, said farmers normally under contract for some firms have not planted because of uncertainty about contract disputes in the industry.

He estimated this year's pea crop could be reduced by as much as 30 per cent, from the 22.1 million pounds, worth $2.1 million, produced last year.

He said some farmers, who did not wait for the contract to be settled, planted other crops. He said it now is too late to plant peas for this year.

Jim Rankin, B.C. manager of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, said it will be early next year before the full effect of problems in the processing industry are known.

He said the effects would be felt "in communities in the valley, through reduced earnings by farmers, canning firms (and) transportation companies."

Postal Deficit $370M?

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office estimates it will have a deficit of $370.9 million in the fiscal year 1975-76, compared with an estimated deficit of $255.6 million in 1974-75.

Information tabled in the Commons Friday by Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey said the 1975-76 budget for the department includes provisions for salary increases of $41.73 million. For 1974-75, the provision for salary increases is $12.97 million.

The salary increase provisions are based on treasury board instructions to compute salary increases of five per cent for 1974-75 and seven per cent for 1975-76 for increases not covered by collective agreements.

The post office's deficit has increased steadily in the last 10 years, the reply shows.

It was $10.9 million in 1964-65, $67.2 million in 1967-68 and $177.2 million in 1972-73.

The development came as the chairman of the federal public service staff relations board said a conciliator will be appointed to deal with a contract dispute between the Canadian union of Postal Workers and the post office.

The union, representing 22,000 postal clerks and mail sorters, had asked the board for appointment of a conciliator to bring the parties together to the bargaining table.

Finkelman said in a news release government negotiators say they have no objection to the appointment of a conciliator.

The conciliator will face a big job. None of the classes of a new contract have been agreed to as yet and there have been few meetings between the parties.

The union says the only issue the government has responded to is wages. Government officials say the union's insistence that employees suspended from their jobs in Montreal be reinstated has delayed talks.

The postal workers have asked for a $3.26-an-hour increase in a one-year contract, while the government has offered $1.15 an hour in four stages over 32 months. The average hourly wage now is $4.59.

Joe Davidson, president of the 22,000-member union, said he believed the bouts of "Mackasey flu" would diminish during the weekend as a result of the announcement. The walkout "flu" is named after Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey.

B.C. Tel Lines Protest 'Stall'

The B.C. Federation of Telephone Workers set up informational picket lines at B.C. Tel offices across the province today, including a 60-strong picket line in Victoria, to protest what a union official called B.C. Tel's "stalling tactics" in signing a contract.

The picket lines, which went up at 10 a.m. today and were taken down at noon, were strictly for informational purposes and were manned by off-duty telephone workers, Jack Sambrooke, president of the 750-member Victoria local, said today.

Sambrooke said the same sort of action could continue next week.

The 10,000 telephone workers in B.C. are "dissatisfied", Sambrooke said, with B.C. Telephone Co's inaction in signing a recently-negotiated contract.

The contract, based on federal conciliation commissioner Hugh Ladner's report, was accepted in principle by both sides in early April.

The contract provides for an 18.5 per cent wage increase this year and a 14 per cent increase during the second year of the contract.

Sambrooke said the union got what it considered an acceptable contract, but there were numerous details that had to be worked out after the conciliation report was accepted in principle.

"The company and the union met to iron out these details, but now they've been ironed out," Sambrooke said.

"We are waiting to sign the contract."

The company apparently wants to postpone signing until one of the contract details, which will be taken to an arbitration board, is cleared up.

Sambrooke said the outstanding issue concerns classifications for some clerical employees "and it is not going to affect the contract that much."

The union wants the contract signed now so it can operate under the better layoff provisions spelled out in the new contract.

"There are definitely things we require that are under the new contract," he said.

The union is actually in a legal strike position, but Sambrooke said no strike action will be taken.

He stressed the picket lines in B.C. today were only for information and said all union members were reporting for their regular shifts and people on the picket lines were not attempting to persuade anyone from entering the B.C. Tel offices.

"We're not going to give the company any excuse to lock us out," he said.

B.C. Tel officials could not be reached for comment.

Two Killed

Two young Victoria women, believed to be in their teens, were killed when a car struck a power pole in the 800 block Esquimalt Friday night. The male driver of the car is in Victoria General Hospital in poor condition.

METCHOSIN BEAR SEEN

Mrs. Joanne Stewart, 4849 Mathews Road, Metchosin, opened her living room window Friday morning and found herself looking at a bear's face.

"It was as big as a chesterfield," she said. "I slammed the window down and he made off. I have heard of bears up north, but never thought I would see one in this area."

A fish and wildlife warden was called but the bear could not be found. It was last seen heading in the direction of Matheson Lake.

Gold Auction Set

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States, trying to make a profit on its stockpile of gold, will hold its second public auction June 30. The treasury department said Friday it will sell about one-half million of the 276 million ozs. it has on hand. At the current free market price of about $167 an ounce, the sale could earn more than $83 million for the government.

New Viet Gov't

SAIGON (UPI) — The new Government of South Vietnam is expected to take office next Friday, replacing the military administration that has run the country since the fall of Saigon one month ago.

Bakery Workers' Union Votes to Strike Weston

VANCOUVER (CP) — Members of the Bakery Workers' Union, Local 468, seeking an $18,964 annual salary, have voted 80-to-5 to strike at Weston Bakeries.

The union said Friday the vote was a sign of strength that the union is prepared to test the newly-formed B.C. Food Industry Labor Relations Council which represents most retail, wholesale and manufacturing outlets in B.C.

High Comber, union secretary-treasurer and chief negotiator, said a negotiating session is scheduled with the council Tuesday, three days after expiry of their contract with the bakeries in the Greater Vancouver and Victoria areas.

"We are just taking a strike vote at the one plant," Comber said in an inerview. "If the talks break off next week we'll be serving 72-hour strike notice at Weston's.

"Then we will find out how strong they are on the basis of whether they lock out at the other operations."

The food council also includes McGavin-Toastmaster and Mrs. Willman's Baking.

Comber estimated a strike-lockout would take 75 per cent of the bread off the market in the Vancouver area. He said bakery workers have turned down a 12.4-per-cent general increase offered by the council.

The strike vote was taken at Weston's main plant in Vancouver.

There are Bakery Workers' Union members in Victoria at Safeway, Weston's, and McGavin-Toastmaster (McDonald's), all involved in the current negotiations.

Law Stands Behind Individual, Rulings Show

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

The first three decisions handed down by boards of inquiry under the provincial Human Rights Code show that the law in B.C. stands behind the rights of all individuals, Human Rights Branch directors Kathleen Ruff said Friday.

The boards of inquiry, set up under the Human Rights Code in October, 1974, to rule on cases of alleged discrimination, handed down their decisions on three separate cases this week, the first three cases ruled on since the legislation has been in effect.

Ruff said the decisions, which rule in favor of the complainants in each case, point out that landlords and employers do have the legitimate right under the law to select good tenants and employees but that the law also requires that each person be considered on his or her own merits, without prejudice.

"People have a right under the law to be free from discrimination and those rights can't just be cast aside because the law stands behind those rights," she said.

Probably the most remarkable of the three cases, dealt with a single parent mother in Burnaby who was refused rent of a home because the owners said a woman could not handle the upkeep of the large garden.

"It actually came out during the hearing that the woman had two lawnmowers and gardening tools and had received praise from previous landlords for her upkeep of the garden," Ruff said.

The five-member board of inquiry ruled that the woman had been discriminated against and awarded her a nominal damage sum of $25.

Ruff said the amount of the award was small because the woman said she was not interested in any compensation "only that the injustice be brought out."

The board has the power to award costs to a person who has been discriminated against and in cases of "wanton" discrimination can award damages of up to $5,000, Ruff said.

She said the case is probably the first in Canada to deal with discrimination against a single mother.

Another of the board's cases dealt with an East Indian

LABERGE CONVICTED

MONTREAL (CP) — Louis Laberge, president of the 300,000-member Quebec Federation of Labor, was convicted Friday on a charge of mischief in Superior Court in Joliette, Que.

Laberge was found guilty by a jury of encouraging workers to sabotage household appliances on the production line at the Hupp Canada Ltd. plant in Joliette, about 50 miles northeast of Montreal, in May, 1974.

He faces a maximum of five years in prison.

Whooping Crane Eggs Given Foster Mothers

WASHINGTON (AP) — United States government biologists say they have new hope of saving the nearly extinct whooping crane after the transplant of 14 wild whooper eggs from Canada into nests of greater sandhill cranes in Idaho.

Biologists expect the sandhills to hatch and raise the young whoopers and lead them south for the winter to establish a second migratory flock of the endangered birds.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced the transplant Friday. It also reported:

—Biologists collecting eggs from wild whooper nests found one nest that contained three eggs, the first discovery that cranes will incubate more than two eggs.

—Predators destroyed a whooper nest in Canada, the first time this phenomenon has been observed. The predators were not identified, but it was thought they might be ravens.

—Dawn, the whooper chick hatched Thursday at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Centre in nearby Maryland, has crooked toes on its left foot. Aides taped the toes in an effort to straighten them permanently.

The eggs were taken from Wood Buffalo National Park in the Northwest Territories. They were placed in sandhill nests located in Grays Lake National Wildlife Refuge in Idaho.

Repairs Slack In ICBC Strike

Car repair work has slumped in Victoria as a result of a decision by body shops to charge the full amount for repairs during the Insurance Corporation of B.C. strike, a body shop spokesman said Friday.

Denis Butner, an official of the Victoria branch of the Automotive Retailers Association, said motorists are driving their damaged cars or storing them rather than pay the full amount for repairs.

"We have been doing a lot of paint jobs because motorists know things are slack and they don't have to wait for this type of work."

ICBC has urged body shops to charge motorists only the $250 duductible and wait until after the strike to collect the rest of their money.

Butner said the policy of Victoria body shops is to charge motorists the full amount, leaving the motorist to collect later from ICBC.

He said he didn't blame motorists for not being excited about the body shop charge but, on the other hand, the shops could not be expected to carry such large deficits themselves not knowing when ICBC would be forwarding the money.

ICBC has said it will pay lump sums each month to "co-operating" shops to assist them during the strike period.

The majority of Victoria shops would not qualify as "co-operating" shops, Butner said.

A co-operating body shop charges motorists only the $250 deductible and its total rate is not higher than the $15.50 an hour covered by ICBC.

Butner said he didn't know of any that were charging just the $250 deductible and most Victoria shops levy a $4.50 an hour surcharge to bring the rate to $20 an hour.

He said local shops also have rejected an ICBC proposal that body shops do appraisal work during the strike.

ICBC said it has indications that the majority of shops will be eligible under the "co-operating" classification. However, most Vancouver Island body shops now levy a surcharge and would not be eligible.

In Vancouver, only a minority of shops indicated they are willing to collect only the $250 deductible portion from motorists and therefore the majority of mainland shops also would not be eligible for the lump sum payment from ICBC during the strike.

Ron Baldwin, provincial coordinator of the ARA, said Friday the association intends to stand firm for the duration of the strike on its policies of not doing appraisal work and demanding full cash payment for repairs.

Baldwin said the ICBC's stand that only "co-operating" shops will receive monthly payments from the corporation was an attempt to place economic pressure on the body shops so the shops will enter into a strike-breaking situation.

RESCUE TEAMS SET FOR CAVES

Vancouver Island explorers are organizing rescue teams and collecting special rescue equipment.

Paul Griffiths of Victoria, a director of the B.C. Speleological Federation, formed in January of this year, said Thursday more people are taking up caving as a sport and like many other outdoor activities accidents are bound to happen.

The RCMP have been supplied with names of experienced spelunkers (cave explorers) who can be called out if someone is injured in a cave, he said.

Cavers saw the need for rescue training when a group of inexperienced people came close to dying of exposure in a limestone cave near Holberg on northern Vancouver Island earlier this year.

Five loggers got into trouble when they slid down a rope to the foot of a 30-foot waterfall.

When the men tried to return, the water forced them back. They had no contact with anyone above the falls or outside the cave. They were soaked and loss of bodily heat soon became apparent.

Finally, one man managed to reach a ledge half way up the falls, and from there inched himself to the top. Help came from the logging camp.

After four hours, the rescuers hauled the men out with a noose around their waists.

Griffiths noted that the rescue operation was devoid of appropriate equipment, such as headgear, lighting and mechanical climbing aids.

"We are now accumulating rescue equipment," he said. "One member has designed an exposure bag to keep an injured person warm as well as special stretcher.

"We are also encouraging our members to take first aid courses."

Griffiths said the caving fraternity includes many experienced men originating from Britain, Europe, United States, South Africa, the Middle East and West Indies.

"The greatest danger in caving is from flooding and falling rocks," he said. "Inexperienced people should not venture into a cave."

He said people interested in cave exploring should attend the weekly meetings of the Canadian Speleological Society, B.C. region, on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m. at the Oak Bay Sports Club, 1928 Oak Bay Avenue.

Childless Parents Seek Comeback

A handful of parents in Greater Victoria who have lost their children are marking the first anniversary of a social experiment thought to be unique in North America.

And thanks to an intriguing approach to the study of such matters, social workers and foster parents in the state of Wisconsin 2,500 miles away know all about it.

The local Natural Parent Group — with 12 active members and a mailing list of about 60 — is an uncomplicated gathering of parents who have had or will have their children taken "in care" by the provincial deparmtnet of human resources.

"In care" is part of the social worker jargon which springs from the grim business of family breakup. When parents can't cope, perhaps because of alcohol or desertion or sickness, one or all of their children may have to be moved into foster homes. Sometimes voluntarily, sometimes by court order.

Such situations create a triangle — natural parents and their children, social workers and foster parents.

Traditionally it's the natural parents, who may have been publicly branded "unfit" by a court, shuttled as quickly and quietly as possible out of the picture.

Yet a long-term objective of foster care is creation of conditions which will allow children to return to their natural parents.

The Natural Parent Group, which has had a couple of false starts in recent years, is an effort to help in that direction. Because it is innovative, word of its spread to the Centre of Social Service at the University of Wisconsin.

The centre conducted a "Foster Care Round Table" and through a telephone conference call hookup last month, groups of educators, social workers and foster parents, gathered at various points in the state heard about the Victoria experiment.

Telling them about it were Mrs. Bernice Levitz Packford, supervisor, parent encouragement program, department of human resources, and "Jeanette," one of the natural parents involved in the group.

"This group offers natural parents a person-to-person relationship that no other party connected with child placement can provide, by simply having shared a similar experience," Jeanette told them.

"The support we can provide natural parents can definitely help to erase the isolation, loneliness, fear and guilt complex they may possess.

The group acts as mediator when a natural parent is in conflict with the plans for his or her children, perhaps over something like visiting arrangements. It also works at educating parents on their rights and on the kinds of assistance, such as homemaker service and counselling, available to them.

"We work towards educating a parent for better relationships with the child's foster parents, his social worker and himself, in order to help create a more calm atmosphere and understanding of each person's job and responsibility in the placement program.

"The more uptight the natural parent is, the longer it will be before his child can return home," she told her Wisconsin audience.

Mrs. Packford said a natural parent group is another ally in preventing the addition of more children to the hundreds of thousands now in foster care limbo.

Such a group can also help some parents be comfortable with the knowledge their children are better off being raised by permanent foster or adopting parents than by themselves, she said.

Anyone interested in finding out more about the Natural Parent Group can phone Joyce at 386-7410 or Sheila at 385-3068.

LOST CITY OF INCAS FOUND, TWO CLAIM

LONDON (Reuter) Two British explorers say they have discovered the Lost City of the Incas in South America and gold worth millions of dollars according to the Daily Mail.

The newspaper said that Dr. David Davies, an anthropology lecturer at London University, and Ross Salmon, a sports commentator, had produced gold axeheads, statuettes and nuggets to back their statement.

The two men, who returned from South America on Friday, are keeping secret the location of the city, Pukara, but Salmon said it was perched high on rocks and guarded by high stone walls where the Amazon jungle joins the Andes mountains, the newspaper reported.

"We are convinced that this is the lost city of fable — and that there are millions of pounds worth of gold there," Davies was quoted as saying.

The newspaper said they are planning a return trip by helicopter to the city.

Province Buys Land From Greenbelt Fund

The provincial government and Central Okanagan Regional District have agreed to purchase 55 acres of land in Kelowna for use as a regional park. The province announced Friday it would pay 50 per cent of the $400,000 purchase price from its greenbelt fund.

The province will also acquire private land along the Adams River to protect high value salmon spawning grounds near Shushwap Lake in the Okanagan, Conservation Minister Jack Radford said.

A development freeze has been placed on the land, valued at $180,000.

The river, only seven miles long, is widely recognized for its value as a salmon spawning ground and the direct value of the catch which spawns in the river is estimated at $20 million annually, Radford said.

The government has received confirmation from Romeo Le Blanc, federal fisheries minister, that the federal government endorses a cost-sharing arrangement with the province to buy land along the river to protect the fishery, Bob Williams, minister of lands, forest and water resources, said.

Trudeau Surprises NATO With Call for Summit

Times News Service

BRUSSELS — Prime Minister Trudeau made a surprise call for more summit meetings by heads of NATO member states here Friday.

Speaking at the closing day of the 15-nation summit meeting, he said: "I plead for more NATO heads of government to gather together for consultation, to discuss among ourselves the essential political questions and to suggest the appropriate political responses."

At a press conference after the summit, President Gerald Ford warmly backed Trudeau's idea, saying: "I would strongly support this kind of idea. Any such meeting at the highest political level is valuable."

Trudeau's call was based on an expressed distrust of military advice and need for politicians like himself to convince voters of "the benefits of the alliance."

Trudeau said that NATO countries, unlike the Warsaw Pact, are disinclined by instinct to accept without challenge charts an tabulations prepared by military advisers, no matter how articulate and competent these advisers may be: "We and our constituents insist on the right to cross-examine, and on the right to question."

"NATO government leaders could not simply proclaim support of the alliance but must be able to persuade electorates" of its usefulness "if we are not to be swept out of office or forced to change our policies."

His plea for more summit meetings came as part of a three-point explanation of Canada's reasons for attending the summit.

One was to state "clearly and unequivocally" Canada's belief in the concept of collective security, Canada's support for NATO, and Canada's pledge to maintain a force level which is accepted by our allies as being adequate in size and effective in character.

Another was to "urge that we at this table accept as an essential ingredient of consultation the continuous challenging of alliance tactics and strategies because unless we, as governments, are convinced of their worth, we shall be in no position to convince our followers or our parliaments."

The third was to organize "a challenge of peace and of human dignity to the Warsaw Pact."

family in Parksville refused rent of a space in a trailer court.

Ruff said the rent for the trailer court space had been increased considerably when the owner found that the family was East Indian.

The board ruled that discrimination had occurred and ordered that the owner give a written apology to the family.

The third case concerned a native Indian family in Port Alberni, also refused rent of a home.

"At the hearing the owners of the house said they did not wish to rent to Indians," Ruff said.

The board ordered that the discrimination be stopped and pointed out the heavier penalties which could be levied if it was continued.

"The people really only wanted it to come to a hearing so it could be brought out in the open," Ruff said.

Ruff said most people involved in the discrimination cases are not interested in gaining compensation for themselves, "only that it should be brought forward."

"People's rights are there under the code, but the rights are not guaranteed unless people stand up for them."

Ford Stresses Spanish Bases

MADRID (AP) — President Ford, pleased with a North Atlantic Treaty Organization summit meeting, arrived in Spain today to spur negotiations on keeping United States military bases in Spain.

Crowds were smaller than those that turned out to see former U.S. presidents Dwight Eisenhower in 1959 and Richard Nixon in 1970.

Security was the tightest in Spanish history as Ford arrived at Barajas airport from the NATO gathering in Brussels.

Six army battalions stood guard as Ford rode in a motorcade with Generalissimo Francisco Franco, 82, Spanish chief of state, who met the president at the airport.

Ford told Franco that Spain "has a place in the trans-Atlantic community" and could be proud of its contribution to Western European defence.

"For more than 20 years Spain has shared with America and with Europe the burdens of promoting the prosperity and security of the Atlanti and Mediterranean regions," he said.

Franco welcomed Ford and said he expected bilaterial cooperation to continue.

Montreal Port Struck

MONTREAL (CP) — The life of the port of Montreal "is in grave and possibly irreversible jeopardy" as a result of the strike launched by longshoremen Friday, the Maritime Employers' Association MEA warned in a telegram to Justice Minister Otto Lang and Labor Minister John Munro.

Members of Local 375 of the International Longshoremen's Association went on strike Friday, only 20 days after a six-week walkout ended with a government-and court-ordered return to work.

In the telegram, MEA president Arnold Masters asked the government to reply by return wire to two crucial questions:

—"What will the government of Canada now do to ensure respect of its own legislation?

—"What will the government of Canada now do to end the state of anarchy at the port of Montreal brought about by men who operate with impunity in massive contempt of Parliament and its laws?"

The telegram said union members have repeatedly violated the law and collective agreement imposed by Parliament last April 24.

Masters said Friday he was informed by union officers at 4 p.m. Friday that 783 of the 900 men had voted to go on strike.

"They just told me they were going on strike and the port was closed."

Grizzlies Mauled Homesteader, Ate His Gun

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Ronald Cole's face was crushed and bleeding and his gun was gone when he staggered to the door of the wilderness cabin he shared with his wife Darcelle.

As the startled woman grabbed her husband's body and carried him inside, the 39-year-old homesteader told her he'd managed to cover two miles to get help after two grizzly bears attacked him while he was surveying the couple's land Tuesday.

"All Ron said was that they ate his gun," Mrs. Cole said later. "I don't know whether he was kidding or not about the gun and I don't know how he managed to get back to the cabin."

The woman seized another rifle for her own protection and took off on a dead run for the nearest neighbor — at Lake Creek Lodge. It was a long and rugged four miles away from their home near Skwentna, 60 miles northwest of Anchorage.

"I don't even know for sure how long it took me to get there — maybe an hour," she said.

Mrs. Cole used a radiophone to contact the rescue co-ordination centre at Elmendorf air force base.

Helicopter pilot Lieut. James Woolworth, paramedic Donald Mulhall and flight surgeon Lieut.-Col. James Olson flew to the lodge, picked up Mrs. Cole and headed for the cabin.

But on arrival the pilot couldn't find a place to land because of the dense wilderness. With his fuel supply dwindling, he finally opted to gingerly set the whirring chopper down on a sandbar in the middle of the river a half mile away.

The rescue team borrowed a small boat from a fisherman "and that's when the real work began," Mulhall said.

The paramedic, doctor and crewman, Sgt. Robert Ewton, had to scale a 500-foot cliff at a 90-degree angle in a driving rainstorm to reach the cabin's clearing.

They found Cole "had been eaten pretty badly, but the bleeding had stopped. He had multiple bites all over his body, broken ribs, and his face was crushed."

He couldn't climb back down the cliff, so Woolworth hovered 100 feet above the trees as Cole was gently lifted through the branches on a litter wnich swayed in 20-mile-an-hour winds.

Thursday Cole was recuperating from six hours of surgery to repair his injuries. He was not able to talk because of the operation and his eyes were swollen shut.

Mrs. Cole was staying with her husband at Providence Hospital, anxiously waiting for the time her husband could tell her what happened.

"I'm sure he'll have a story to tell once he's able," she said. "But I'm sure we'll go back there. My husband is a pretty tough, determined man."

Air Fare Hike Appealed

OTTAWA (CP) — A Canadian transport commission ruling that permits domestic air fare increases was appealed to the federal cabinet Friday.

The Consumers' Association of Canada and the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan asked the cabinet in separate appeals to review the commission decision which cleared increases by Air Canada, CP Air and the five regional airlines.

They suggested that if the cabinet finds the appeal reasonable, the transport commission should be told to set new revenue levels for the airlines. The air carriers then could be told to submit new fares.

'THIRD WORLD WAR LOST'

PARIS (Reuter) — The "Third World War" has taken place and the West has been defeated, exiled Soviet author Alexander Solzhenitsyn says in an article published Friday.

In an essay written for the Paris newspaper Le Monde, Solzenitsyn argues that the "Third World War" began immediately after the Second and ended with the Communist sweep in Indochina.

The average citizen in the Communist world is well aware of the victory, he says.

"Two or three more decades of peaceful coexistence as glorious as the last and the very concept of the West will vanish from the face of the earth.

Listing the loss of China, North Korea, Cuba, North Vietnam, South Vietnam and Cambodia, he writes:

"Laos is about to go, Thailand, South Korea and Israel are threatened, Portugal is rushing irretrievably down the same abyss."

Gov't Rescues Travellers

Canadian Press

B.C. consumers who paid money to a now defunct Vancouver travel agency will be able to take the flights booked for them by the firm. Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young said Fridoy.

Earlier this month, Sunbird Travel closed it operations without warning, and there was a possibility that a number of customers were going to find themselves without their reservations on charter flights for whom Sunbird had acted as a selling agent, the consumer services department said in a news release.

Apparently, several charter wholesalers and the affected airlines had not received full payment from the travel firm, and as a result, the bookings were in jeopardy, the release said.

"We were very concerned about the situation," said "We were very concerned about the situation," said Mrs. Young, "since these consumers had no warning that anything charters involving very established tour operators and airlines. They were buying a seat, not the chance of a seat."

The majority of the cases involved chorter bookings to Europe and, in some cases, relatives were being brought out from Europe for long-awaited family visits.

Meanwhile, the government has dropped plans to introduce in the current session of the legislature a bill to protect consumers against undesirable practices in the travel industry, according to Bill Neilson, deputy consumer services minister.

The main reason is that preparing such legislation has turned out to be more difficult than originally thought.

"It isn't just legislation you whip up overnight, as the experience in Ontario has shown," Neilson said in an interview. He said the new consumer protection legislation affecting the travel industry in Ontario has created difficulties and that both the government and industry in that province have admitted it.

One of the proposed bill's features would be establishment of a $250,000 compensation fund out of which aggrieved persons would recover costs for services not received.

Deadline Missed For Clean Air

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Today is the deadline set five years ago by which the states were supposed to have clean air.

Most don't.

Environmental Protection Agency Chief Russell Train said Friday at least 159 of the nation's 247 air quality control regions have air too dirty to meet federal standards in one or more categories established in the Clean Air Act of 1970.

Train said some of the reasons for the deadline not being met were lack of local enforcement, the energy crisis necessitating industries switching to dirtier fuels and resistance from the steel industry.

"No one back in December of 1970 imagined that it would be easy to achieve clean air," Train told a news conference. "However, many of us doubtless underestimated the complexities involved."

The standards measure five types of pollution: particulates, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, various oxidants such as ozone, and nitrogen dioxide.

Los Angeles, Chicago and Philadelphia were the only three of the 247 regions that did not meet the standards in all five categories.

On a bright note, Train said sulphur dioxide concentrations have been cut by 25 per cent nationwide since 1970, particularly in major metropolitan areas.

He also said 78 per cent of the nation's 20,000 major "stationary sources" of air pollution such as industries and electric power plants are on schedule in complying with the antipollution law.

Steel producers, electric power plants and auto makers headed Train's list of the worst industrial offenders.

"I think it is safe to say there is not one single steel-making facility in the country that is in compliance with the Clean Air Act at this time," he said, "and I cannot predict when they will be in compliance."

Asked whether the industry was resisting obeying the law, Train replied: "The steel industry is a difficult, tough customer to deal with." But he also noted that steel plants have cut their particulate emissions by four million tons a year since 1970 and now must eliminate only 1.5 million tons more a year to comply with federal standards.

An Important Announcement from MSA

MSA announces the introduction of an Extended Health Benefit Plan for Individual Subscribers and Families!

Now for the first time . . . Coverage available only through group plans, is available to individuals and families for a limited time only with the introduction of MSA's new Individual EHB Plan.

What is EHB? . . . and why do you need it!

The Extended Health Benefit Plan or EHB is a special supplementary Health Insurance plan that takes over where your B.C. Government Medical Insurance leaves off! It enables subscribers to protect themselves against costs and services not covered by The Provincial Medical and Hospital Plans.

These extra costs can be a substantial financial drain, particularly if incurred outside the Province of B.C. The low cost of EHB coverage has made it one of the most attractive types of group insurance coverage available. This same insurance protection is now available to individuals who enroll during the special June enrollment period.

What are the benefits of EHB?

1. Out of Province emergency medical and hospital costs—an important consideration for anyone travelling outside British Columbia.
2. Drugs when prescribed by a physician.
3. Private and Semiprivate hospital room accommodation—over and above that paid by Government agencies such as B.C.H.I.S.
4. Fees of private duty registered nurse when ordered by attending physician for the management of an actually ill patient.
5. Treatment by a registered physiotherapist when ordered by attending physician.
6. Treatment by a licensed podiatrist (xrays excluded).
7. Treatment by a licensed chiropractor or naturopath—up to $200 per person, $500 per family per calendar year.
8. Charges for oxygen, prosthetic appliances, crutches, casts, trusses and braces when ordered by attending physician.

Costs

EHB coverage for an individual subscriber will cost $10.50 for 6 months coverage, $21.00 for 6 months coverage per couple or $24.00 for 6 months coverage for a family.

There is a minimum six months coverage and you will be automatically billed for succeeding six month periods on a semi-annual basis.

How much does EHB pay?

There is an annual $25.00 deductable amount per person or family per calendar year. MSA EHB will reimburse subscribers 80% of all eligible expenses in excess of the basic deductable amount. In the case of out of Province Medical and Hospital costs 100% of the prevailing rate in the area will be paid.

In other words if your family incurs eligible expenses in the amount of $250.00 in a calendar year MSA EHB will reimburse 80% or this amount less the $25.00 deductable or $180.00.

Limited Enrollment Period!

Remember this opportunity is available only for the month of June. June 30th is the cut-off date for coverage to commence July 1st, 1975.

How to enroll!

Fill out the coupon below—enclose your cheque or money order for the first six months premium and mail today.

You will receive an official acknowledgement of enrollment effective July 1st and detailed information on the coverage and claims procedure.

Note: This ad does not constitute a contract. It contains a generalized description of the services covered; more specific details will be contained in the acknowledgement agreement that will be mailed to you on receipt of your application. Please read this agreement carefully on receipt, if you do not find the conditions satisfactory, a refund will be granted for a period of up to 14 days.

One Base Hit in Quebec

In the wake of Quebec's Cliche Commission investigation of the province's construction industry Premier Robert Bourassa has received much praise for his strong stand on the rule of law. The Quebec premier went so far as to say social order would take precedence over beleaguered Olympic construction in Montreal. More applause. But let us examine what has been done to date.

The first three bills brought down in the province's National Assembly put three unions under government trusteeship. That was a good start. But Bourassa has said and done nothing about some of the other major commission recommendations. They concerned allegations about the electoral activities of the provincial Liberal party, illegal activities within the civil service and the construction industry. To date there has only been mild legislation to encourage honesty among construction companies. If the Quebec Liberals are to govern with even handed justice they must look to their own house. Provincial Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer attended meetings where unions were given illegal monopolies at the James Bay Construction site. Justice Minister Jerome Choquette ignored appeals for help during labor troubles at the Quebec Mining Company properties. The list of ills brought to light by the Cliche Commission goes on and on.

Yet only the unions have felt the touch of the government's lash. And quite a lash it is. Controls include barring those with criminal records from holding union office, a requirement that unions furnish government with exhaustive information and those accused of inciting an illegal strike are guilty until proven innocent. The last point is clearly a travesty of justice, the tool of an authoritarian regime, not a duly elected government. More than 200 recommendations were put forward by the commission. Why has the government only seen fit to act on a very few affecting unions? Only time and the Quebec government can answer that question.

Bourassa has survived two political kidnappings, troops in his cities and the murder of one of his cabinet ministers. In 1972 he jailed labor leaders for refusing to obey a back to work order. He has to show strength in a volatile province where sentiment exists to end the federal connection completely. The Cliche Commission has shown much dirt under government rugs. If the Liberals don't clean it up, the jaded people of Quebec may look elsewhere for somebody who will. After all the years of trying to keep this country together, trying to make it workable, it would be tragic to lose Quebec by default. Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa should clean up his own government first. Any interpretation of the commission's findings will show that is where the rot began.

Better Than No News

We can't be too choosy about the news coverage Canada gets in the world press. True, it's not always what Canadians would like, but any mention is better than none. Prime Minister Trudeau's skiing and swimming at different resorts is always good for a wirephoto or two in the weekly news magazines.

And the Olympics, or rather the guessing game Mayor Jean Drapeau is playing, keeps Montreal datelines on sports pages around the globe. Canada is always good for a mention in the American television weather reports, even if we're always portrayed as the ice-locked home of the "cold front coming down from Canada tonight."

So it was with swelling hearts and a thrill of pride that we turned to page two of a recent issue of the Wall Street Journal to read that Canada is up there with high-rolling nations like Italy, South Korea and Bolivia.

It was the fallout of a scandal the Journal started rolling with the disclosure that Gulf Oil Corp. has handed out $5 million for "political purposes" abroad, donations in cash and kind to Arab states and to the rulers of South Korea and Bolivia.

In the wake of Gulf Oil's confession came mea culpas from Mobil, Standard of Indiana and Standard of California that they also made political contributions. Mobil and Indiana Standard gave at the office to Canada and Italy. Previously, Exxon Corp. (Imperial Oil Corp. is its subsidiary in Canada) said it also made contributions to political parties in the two countries. Such contributions are illegal in the U.S., but perfectly legitimate by Canadian and Italian laws.

Who got the money in Canada? "Obviously, Imperial doesn't contribute to such parties as the New Democratic Party whose ideologies would nationalize us or put us out of business," said an Imperial spokesman.

That was all the Journal said about Canada. Not too flattering. But can any newspaper story that links Canada with the Arabs and South Korea be all bad publicity? The only hitch is, we've no way of knowing where we stand on the political contribution scale. If South Korea is worth $4 million to Gulf Oil because it had $300 million in facilities there, then how much did Imperial distribute in Canada, where its installations must be worth many times that amount?

Fess up, Imperial, for the greater Canadian good. Did we rate more than Italy, less than Bolivia (about $450,000 by rough estimate), or about the same as South Korea?

EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

$80,000 Down the Drain And Spats for the Board

A rather quiet week hereabouts.

Estimate debates are back on the track in the legislature. The Liberals have sheathed their knives for the time being. As usual though, enough bits and pieces are floating around to make the sane grind their teeth.

For years provincial censors in one guise or another have been cutting up films to save the people from their own excessive natures. Both government and opposition spokesmen complained this week about the $79,632 bill for the B.C. film classification officer. Our system is among the more enlightened though. R. W. McDonald only classifies films, except in the grossest cases, inserting little cautionary notes.

The last is ludicrous hypocrisy. For example, Stanley Kubrick's Clockwork Orange played Victoria earlier this week.

"Warning: P e r v e r t e d sex, much swearing and coarse language; extreme brutality, rape and nudity — R. W. McDonald, B.C. Director."

Now what more could a voyeur scanning the ads ask for? The warning is also funny in that it cautions against the reality of our everyday lives. In my daily rounds of the speaker's corridor of the legislature I often hear "much swearing and coarse language." The same goes for our news desk around deadline.

"Extreme brutality, rape and nudity" can be found in varying degrees any time you turn on the television set or visit a magazine rack. Yet a film dramatization of the human reality sends politicians and people alike into paroxyms of indignation.

For B.C. to spend $80,000 annually on a subjective classification system which only serves to titillate the immature is patently ridiculous. Other than keeping children away from some of the more twisted diversions of their elders, why not do away with all forms of classification or censorship?

I can remember when San Francisco's North Beach area was thrown open to nude dancing and pornographic films. After the novelty wore off, most of the clientele was from Oklahoma, Alberta, B.C. or other repressed areas.

The same was true in Denmark. Danes never noticed the lurid window displays. But the shops were full of Spaniards, Italians and Canadian tourists. In fact, to work in the shops English or Spanish was a prerequisite.

Just how jealously provincial regimes protect their rights of repression is shown in an upcoming court case. The former editor of the Dartmouth Free Press won the right to appeal the Nova Scotia censorship board's ban on the film Last Tango in Paris. Prior to this ruling, citizens had to have some direct interest in the government action they were protesting. Now Saskatchewan, Alberta and Ontario have served notice they will intervene, on the side of bluenose Nova Scotia, of course. Goodness, a favorable decision for the editor might open the way to public challenges on all kinds of government activities. That would never do.

Perhaps if we stared some unpleasant human realities in the face we would have more luck in changing them.

Which brings to mind another fussy little hangover from a bygone era. Victoria city council grumped a bit that new firemen's uniforms are sans ties. Why do we insist on dressing officials as if they were about to lead the charge of the light brigade? To listen to our good aldermen one would think they had stiff necks encased in celluloid collars. Reading about their recent concerns one gets the impression they would like to lock every door on Sunday, end topless dancing, and anchor the whole community in leaden spats.

Victoria city policemen, squeezed into uniforms that look something like war surplus from General Gordon's fuzzy wuzzy campaign, would also like to dress more informally in the warm months. Ties and Sam Browne belts are not exactly helpful when slugging it out with an opponent in a tight blue jean outfit. It is time we stopped demanding policemen and firemen d r e s s like doormen at ethnic restaurants.

Speaking of slugging it out, the venerable library board — a group that should wear spats — took exception to a May 3 Times editorial criticizing them for ending the print lending service. The editorial also warned against discontinuing the record-loaning service. At its last meeting the board spent more time on the editorial than on library business, or so I hear tell.

Now a little healthy disagreement between officialdom and newspapers is a natural thing. But when one of your own castigates the editorial to the board, well, it almost brings tears to the eyes. What a newspaperman is doing on such a board, subject as it is to public criticism, I'll never know. Edward Ward-Harris must have his own reasons.

Still, when he smugly says that the Times editorial was simply a matter of filling a space on the editorial page on a certain day, I disagree strongly. No Times editorial is ever written to fill space. Perhaps Mr. Ward-Harris is only reflecting his own experience on the Colonist.

Some Startling Legal Statistics

TORONTO — Much interest and some alarm has been occasioned by an all-too-brief article in a recent issue of Chitty's Law Journal which appears to show that in the appeal courts of Canada the criminal law is not being dispensed with a uniform or even hand.

The article, written by Alberta lawyer Philip Lister, shows fairly conclusively that acquittal rates in criminal appeals vary widely between provinces, even though the criminal code applies throughout Canada and judges in the provincial courts of appeal are bound to a common body of jurisprudence.

Lister analyzed all appellate decisions reported in Canadian Criminal Cases over a 40-month period from late 1970 to early 1974 in order to obtain "acquittal rates" — the term "acquittal" being loosely used here to mean the decision went in favor of the accused.

He was then able to compile the following table:

British Columbia	57-139	41.0%
Alberta	10-64	15.7%
Saskatchewan	7-55	12.7%
Manitoba	7-35	20.0%
Ontario	130-272	44.1%
Quebec	10-23	43.5%
New Brunswick	20-43	46.5%
Nova Scotia	7-40	17.5%
Newfoundland	0-1	0.0%
Prince Edward Island	7-13	53.9%
Sup. Court of Canada	16.88	18.2%

Economic Conditions?

Thus, there were 139 appeals in British Columbia reported for the period under review, and either the accused won or the Crown lost in 57 of them, for an acquittal rate of 41 per cent.

These statistics have to be interpreted carefully. They do not mean, for example, that an accused person has a better chance of being acquitted on appeal in Ontario than, say, in Nova Scotia (as some reports have erroneously suggested). One would have to have statistics on lower court convictions before such a conclusion might possibly be drawn, since obviously cases are appealed only if the accused's lawyer thinks he has some chance of winning.

It must also be noted that not all appellate court decisions are recorded in Canadian Criminal Cases. Only decisions where written reasons are given and an important or neat point of law is involved are reported. Lister's "acquittal rates" cannot therefore be taken as absolute or comprehensive.

Even so, his statistics are startling in more ways than one. It is surely remarkable, for example, that there were 272 criminal appeals in Ontario during the period reviewed and only 23 in Quebec, a province of roughly equivalent population. This strongly suggests that economic conditions — the ability to afford a lawyer — and the existence of Ontario's superior legal aid system have something to do with the accessibility of justice in the two provinces.

SUPREME COURT
. . . what kind of justice?

Lister, however, is more interested, and understandably so, in noting that the 10 provinces tend in their acquittal rates to fall into one of two groups — Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Nova Scotia with low rates between 12 and 20 percent, and British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island with 40 per cent and over.

He concludes, I think correctly, that distinct groupings of this sort are evidence that his statistics are not random, meaningless results but rather indicate the presence of "two definite and distinct tendencies or approaches operating today in Canadian appellate courts."

Just what these two approaches are, and why, Lister leaves to the speculation of his readers, although he suggests that "the obvious correlation of low acquittal rates with agricultural rather than urbanized, industrialized economies cannot be avoided."

I would think this is precisely the inference that should be avoided, since it is not justified by the data. If agricultural economies tend to have low acquittal rates and urbanized economies high ones, then there should be no marked difference in the rates of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick because their economies are roughly similar.

One would need — and hopefully some sociologists will supply it — an in-depth investigation of Lister's data before explanations can be advanced. All one can say at the moment is that his findings are a cause for concern, especially for the legal profession, jurists and politicians.

Balkanization of Canada

Unlike the United States, where criminal law falls within state jurisdiction, the Criminal Code of Canada is federal law and the courts are bound to apply it evenly throughout the country. This is a little-appreciated constitutional feature of Canada which has probably had much to do with mitigating, if not avoiding, many of the law enforcement problems which have plagued the U.S., particularly as regards organized crime.

Lister's data, however, suggests that the courts, at least on the appellate level, are not applying the criminal law evenly, and that different criteria are being used, no doubt unconsciously, in different parts of the country. This certainly bears looking into.

My own suspicion is that it has something to do with the fact that the administration of justice in Canada is a provincial responsibility, and that some provinces are not enforcing the criminal law with the same vehemence (or flexibility) as others, for reasons which are deep-rooted in their politics and culture.

If so, there is probably nothing much that can be done about it, except to recognize it as another step in the Balkanization of Canada.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

By Freeman King

To see a change in the way plants behave and in the showing of their blooms, go for a drive over the Malahat and around Shawnigan Lake, where you will find some vast changes.

As you leave Victoria and join the highway — say at Burnside Road — it now becomes a golden highway, for beside the road the golden broom is at its best and the creamy blooms of the arbutus tree add to the beauty of the highway. As you get to Goldstream Park, the dogwoods show up with startling beauty, while the new flushings on the conifers make a pleasing contrast.

When you get to the picnic sites at Goldstream, you will see the alders there are in full leaf and the perfume from the cottonwoods is just wonderful. Stop a while here and walk around. There are very many interesting things to see — the wild lily of the valley is blooming, the wild ginger plant with its hidden flower can be found while the skunk cabbage is almost finished now and the salmon berries are in bloom.

The river is now low and the water is singing in a low key, although it is not sad. If you look into the deeper pools, you'll see several thousand coho fry which stay in the river until next spring before they brave the deep waters of the salt chuck.

Now back to the car and on our way, and as we go up the hill, the glory of the broom is no longer with us. The only bright thing along the road is our old friend, the dandelion with its bright yellow flowers. Even the evergreens don't seem as bright and fresh.

Turn to the left at the lake road — now you will see some changes. There are many elderberry bushes in bloom. The yellowish-white flowers are not as showy as those of many other shrubs but in this setting they make a very pleasing contrast. Here and there along the way we can see shrubs with white flowers. This is the saskatoon berry. Beside the road, the dandelion is still with us, showing its golden-colored blossoms. Along the road, wherever there is a clearing, it will be covered with daisies, and this year they seem to be in abundance. Perhaps the cold nights and warm days are ideal for their growth.

The difference in the rate of growth in plants is no doubt due to climatic conditions. Each plant reacts to the natural conditions of weather and climate around it.

Although most plants are behind schedule this year, there are some rather strange things to be seen. A number of summer-blooming plants are in flower, such as the larkspur, the camas, sanicale and others. Is this brought about by the climatic conditions, the warm days and cold nights, or are the plants thinking an early fall is coming and so react accordingly?

Perhaps on your way you saw a bald eagle over Saanich Inlet, or an osprey as you drove up the Malahat. Go again in a week or so and you will see many more changes that have taken place.

Allmand Admired

As an officer of the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, I would like to express my admiration for the principled and courageous stand that Solicitor-General Warren Allmand has taken on capital punishment. Of course, I hope that he will not be forced to resign his portfolio should the federal cabinet allow any prisoner to hang. It was, however, honorable of him to state that intention, especially considering the current outcry favoring the execution for murderers.

Our association's stand on capital punishment is abolitionist because we have concluded that the death penalty is not justified on any grounds. As members of a civilized society, we should reject capital punishment as inconsistent with the values we wish to uphold. The death penalty undermines human dignity. Moreover, statistical evidence indicates that the death penalty does not deter a would-be murderer. Murder is indeed repugnant, and murderers must be punished. But executions by the state are not the answer.

Our organization supports the proposed governmental bill to ban all executions. We urge all citizens to assist in the passage of this bill in parliament. — Dr Robert Rowan, Vice-President, British Columbia Civil Liberties Association.

Voting System

I note that Dr. Pat McGeer lays down as a condition of joining the Socreds that legislation should be introduced to change our present system of voting so that as he says "we will avoid the possibility of again electing a minority socialist government." However I do not recall that this great exponent of reform of our voting system expressed such views when the Socreds held for some 20 years as a minority government. Of course this was in order with Dr. McGeer as the Socreds were the great defenders of so-called "free enterprise." It is a pity that the great democratic governments of the Socred years did not allow us, the public of B.C. to have Hansard or I believe Dr. McGeer would be a little embarrassed to hear some of the speeches he made during those 20 years. — M. P. B. Wrixon, 301—1701 Cedar Hill X Road.

A Little Bit of Old Soho Too?

By PAUL MOSS
Times City Hall Reporter

Perhaps it's just a little too easy to lampoon Mayor Peter Pollen's suggestion that Victoria city council consider some sort of action to halt what he sees as the downhill slide in our urban morality.

Rather too glib is the temptation to label him a latter-day Mrs. Grundy, bent on sending a squad of righteous raiders — Aldermen Malcolm Anderson, Bob Ellis and Bill Tindall — to scour the middens of this city, root out the rottenness and lewdness that lurk therein and restore us all to a state of driven-snow purity.

The loyal defenders of anything-goes tolerance will lay on the sarcasm with shovels:

If city fathers want to legislate high moral standards among the citizenry, why just stop-stop the go-go girls?

Or how about a discreet screen or two in the Beacon Hill Park animal enclosure, in case anyone is offended by the sight of copulating guinea-pigs?

The possibilities for poking fun are endless, but let's try to stifle the washroom sniggers and examine the mayor's fears on the possible "proliferation" (currently the most overworked word in his vocabulary) of stripping and topless dancing in Victoria's drinking establishments.

While proliferation seems hardly the term to apply to the two pubs now offering this type of entertainment several times daily, it's worth noting that the Colony started doing so barely six weeks after the Tally-Ho pioneered the undulating trail in early March — with two young dancers who stripped down to their g-strings.

In both establishments now, after the customary shedding of garments, the females strut and slither topless, bottomless and every other less, before mostly male audiences of afternoon imbibers.

The current attraction at the Colony gives a performance of raw, sweaty sexuality that leaves absolutely nothing to the imagination. It is, say those who have seen the "meat markets" of Los Angeles and San Francisco, every bit as explicit as anything available down there.

The other day a male customer of this watering hole, perhaps fed-up waiting for the early afternoon performance to begin, decided to liven things up by doing his own impromptu strip turn.

By the door, while his friends and other patrons laughed uproariously, he slipped down his trousers and undershorts for a departing woman companion to admire the effect. She laughed and patted him on the appropriate spot, then left still laughing.

Okay, say those who espouse free and easy permissiveness, this sort of thing is bound to happen when boisterous young people with a beer or six too many inside them gather for stimulating entertainment.

But what of the other customers, older people and those in mixed groups who merely wanted a social drink and a chat, possibly unaware that nude dancing was also on the menu. The answer to that, apparently, is that they have the choice of leaving, and no doubt several do.

But back to Pollen and his proliferation theory. If the Colony can report, as it did this week, that "our day trade has picked up" since its euphemistically-entitled burlesque shows began, how much longer will it be before other pubs discard their inhibitions?

And what will be the next stage in Victoria's trendy evolution: body rub parlors?

After that, presumably, it will be but a short step to coin-operated machines showing pornographic movie clips.

And before you know it we'll have all the appurtenances and amenities of "sophisticated" cities like Toronto, New York and London; our very own Soho or Yonge Street. Now wouldn't that be something, eh swingers?

All this, of course, will be dismissed as hysterical hyperbole, kowtowing to Pollen's quaint theory that standards of taste and decency have to be enforced if they don't evolve naturally.

But even if we abhor any suggestion of stuffy, sanctimonious aldermen telling the rest of us what we can and can't do with our leisure time, can we continue to ignore much longer Pollen's old-fashioned warnings about what's happening to quiet litte Victoria?

LABERGE . . . the challenger

The Globe and Mail

Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec is confronted with what is shaping up as the most severe pressure faced by the premier of a Canadian province in many years. Having introduced legislation to carry out key recommendations of the Cliche Report on corruption and violence in the affairs of Quebec construction unions, Mr. Bourassa has now staked his entire future as a believable figure in Canadian politics on the manner in which he stands by his commitment to see these measures through.

The pledges offered by Mr. Bourassa and his ministers have been reassuringly firm. Premier Bourassa has proclaimed his government's readiness to risk a head-on clash with the four unions to be placed under trusteeship. Justice Minister Jerome Choquette has said Quebec City will "not allow itself to be intimidated, nor yield to any blackmail". Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer said the government is ready to go all the way.

But the testing of that resolve is yet to come and it can be expected to be stormy. Walkouts on Olympic construction sites in Montreal and demonstrations at the National Assembly in Quebec City already offer hints that there could be serious disruption and civil disobedience. The challenge to the government comes not only from the four construction unions for which trusteeship is proposed. Louis Laberge, president of the Quebec Federation of Labor, of which the disciplined unions are members, has taken up their quarrel with Mr. Bourassa. And the Confederation of National Trade Unions, although it welcomed the Cliche commission, has now taken its distance from the report and promised to fight, if necessary, for "trade union freedom."

Thus the issue in this confrontation is becoming a broader one than merely the legislation of the Cliche Report recommendations. It will inevitably be seen as providing an answer to the question: who runs Quebec? The government or the construction unions? And the timetable for Olympic construction, already running seriously behind, gives the unions a powerful weapon with which to test Mr. Choquette's determination to resist blackmail.

In the aftermath of Judge Robert Cliche's inquiry it is not only the unions that pose problems for Mr. Bourassa and his government. Some of the behavior of Mr. Bourassa's own supporters could prove troublesome, too. Although the Cliche Report let the politicians off with a comparatively gentle rebuke for Mr. Cournoyer's inability to control his own department, evidence presented at commission hearings sketched some links between union corruption and fund-raising activities by some of Mr. Bourassa's supporters.

How much leverage the QFL construction unions can still apply to Mr. Bourassa remains to be demonstrated. But the ultimate reinforcement for Mr. Bourassa's firmness must be the certainty that if he knuckles under his political future will go down with him.

'The Noblest Badger of Them All'

By RED SMITH

Ambrose Bierce defined "epitaph" as an inscription on a tomb showing that virtues acquired by death have a retroactive effect. And Dr. Samuel Johnson, musing on the discrepancies that sometimes occur between a person's standing with his fellows and the sentiments engraved on his tombstone, observed that "in lapidary inscriptions a man is not upon oath." Perhaps it is not impertinent to suggest a line for Avery Brundage's headstone: "For once he gave in."

It is difficult to believe he went meekly, though, even at 87. One pictures him still haughtily erect at the end, shoulders squared, staring coldly down his nose at an apologetic angel of death. "So he passed over and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side."

As president of the Amateur Athletic Union, president of the United States Olympic Committee and for 20 years president of the International Olympic Committee, Avery Brundage stood as a monument to Avery Brundage's concept of sport. It did not trouble him that what he stood for existed mainly in his own mind.

To him there was no sport except amateur sport, though the fact is there is hardly a real amateur competing today above the high school or yacht club level. Excluding professional games from his definition of sport, he was able to shut his eyes to the fact that in the international circles where he presided not one athlete in a thousand could meet his standards. In this respect he was a vestigial structure like the vermiform appendix, a throwback to a day when there was a leisure class that could afford to give full time to games for pleasure alone.

Avery himself was no product of a leisure class. He was a working stiff whose strength of character and love of competition enabled him to excel at athletics in his spare time while making a fortune in business. Characteristically, he took the attitude forever after that if he could do it, so could anybody else.

"The noblest Badger of them all," John Lardner called him. He was sincere and honest and inflexible and intransigent, with an integrity equaled only by his insensitivity. Before the 1948 Olympics he attended a luncheon in his honor given by American news correspondents stationed in London. Instead of saying, "Thanks, it's nice to be here," he lectured his hosts on the newspaper business, instructing them to expunge baseball, football, boxing, racing and other commercial activities from the sports pages.

When there was opposition to holding the 1936 Olympics in Nazi Germany, he rode the protests down. "Certain Jews," he said, "must understand that they cannot use these games as a weapon in their boycott against the Nazis."

No matter how these words sound today, Avery wasn't an evil man, only blind with righteousness. When black African nations threatened to boycott the 1972 Olympics if Rhodesia were admitted, he denounced their actions as "naked political blackmail," although it was only through a transparent political expedient that Rhodesia had been invited in the first place. Later, after the massacre of 11 Israelis in Olympic Village in Munich, he bracketed the mass murders and the Rhodesian argument together.

At a memorial service for the dead Israelis, he spoke as though these events were equally disagreeable incidents staged to disrupt the games. With the cry, "The Games must go on!" he turned a ceremony of mourning into a pep rally.

It is not easy to comprehend a mind like that, but it helps if one remembers that Avery was a member of the America First Committee and a self-described "110 per cent American" — the Klu Klux Klan only claimed 100 per cent — who once admitted: "People like me haven't had anybody to vote for since Hoover and Coolidge."

Although Avery was frequently wrong-headed, he could also be arrogant and condescending. In the informal climate of sports, he addressed people by surname as though they were servants. Having him call people "Walsh" and "Spelvin" did little to warm up a gathering.

Once he wrote a surprisingly warm note of acknowledgement for a column defending his position on some issue. (Opportunities to write in that vein were a special pleasure because they were so rare.) In the column a nickname had appeared which was then popular with English Olympians — Slavery Avery. The note of acknowledgement ended with a postscript that had a harrumphing tone: "Don't care much for that 'Slavery Avery.'"

BRUNDAGE . . . for once he gave in

That, of course, was only one of many nicknames pinned on him by the young people he encountered around the world. His imperious mien, his starchy manners and his unyielding attitudes made him irresistibly attractive as a target for the young. It was not by accident that the first big boulder encountered in the canoe slalom course at the 1972 Olympics came to be known as Brundage's Nose. It was the hardest rock in the stream.

De mortuis nil nisi bonum, and all that, but it is a fact that with the news of Avery's passing, there came to mind Dorothy Parker's epitaph for another rich man:

Hockey Arena Death Reporting Questionable

By BORDEN SPEARS
Toronto Star

The Ontario Court of Appeal, by a two to one margin, last month decided that Paul Smithers was correctly convicted of manslaughter in the death of Barrie Cobby. Cobby died more than two years ago, after he was punched and kicked by Smithers as their teams were leaving Cawthra Arena in Mississauga at the end of a midget hockey game. A jury found Smithers guilty last June and he was sentenced to six months confinement and a probationary term of two years. An appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada against the conviction was launched last week.

The merits of the case must be left to the judges; but something can be said about the reporting of it, in the press and on the air, which left much to be desired.

Two elements in the tragedy combined to make it a compelling news story. One was the youth of the players — 16 and 17 years — and the scathing denunciation by the trial judge and lawyers of violence in minor hockey. The other element was race; Smithers was the only black player in the league, and allegations of racial prejudice were introduced in evidence.

The most glaring error of fact in all the news reporting was the repeated reference to the fatal encounter, in all the news media, as a fight. The evidence of all witnesses made it clear that no fight occurred, either on or off the ice. There had been an exchange of insults after Cobby was penalized for spearing Smithers, and both players were ejected from the game for bad language. Cobby spent the rest of the game at his team's bench. After the game he tried to avoid Smithers by hurrying to a waiting car, and did not retaliate when he was punched and kicked by Smithers, who broke the hold of three men trying to restrain him.

The jurors, who found Smithers guilty, were evidently not influenced by the news stories, but the public were misled about the nature of the incident. Readers, television viewers, and radio listeners were also given an unbalanced impression of the degree to which racial animosity was a factor in the tragedy.

There was evidence that in the shouting after Cobby was penalized, Smithers was called a "nigger," a "coon," and a "dirty black bastard," by Cobby and by other players and spectators. There was evidence also that Smithers had been subjected to racial slurs in previous games with other teams, and Smithers testified that he "couldn't take it any more." All this was fully reported, and made headlines.

But there was also testimony, from other witnesses, that these terms were not so much expressions of racial bias as handy epithets between contestants in a game marked by rough play and bad language. Cobby and Smithers were the outstanding players on their two teams; they had roughed each other up in previous games and there was evidence that their animosity was personal, not racial. This evidence was not reported.

The unbalanced reporting was not confined to the Toronto press, and did not end with the trial. The New York Sunday Times of Oct. 27, 1974 — a year and a half after the event — carried a full-page story on violence in sport which was based almost totally on the game that ended in Barrie Cobby's death. The story, in its detailed inaccuracies and its concentration on the racial theme, extended the distortions. It contained this passage:

"It was not hockey they were playing at Cawthra Arena on Feb. 18; they were waging war, a war orchestrated by a crowd that a times appeared to be emotionally deranged . . . As the game progressed the crowd reaction assumed an increasingly ugly character almost in perfect cadence to the illicit violence and racist baiting on the ice . . .

"At one point, the game threatened to get completely out of hand when the entire Applewood team and parents in the area started to taunt Smithers and yell, 'Get the nigger.'"

There is little correspondence between this emotional account and the evidence, given at the trial, of those who attended the game. The thundering crowd, for example, numbered perhaps three dozen persons. And the general accuracy of the story is symbolized in a reference to the Mississauga midgets as "future custodians of the Republic."

Again, on March 1 of this year, the Washington Post carried a lengthy feature story (reprinted on this page —Ed.) in which the racial references were frther embellished and the scanty group of specators appeared like the mob in a Roman arena, roaring for the kill.

In all truth, the difficulties in the way of producing a fair and balanced running report of such an event as the Smithers trial are formidable. The trial took more than a week of testimony and legal argument; the transcript of proceedings runs to nearly 1,000 pages.

No newspaper could hope to report more than a fraction of the testimony; each day's summary is necessarily incomplete and can only highlight the more sensational and "newsworthy" developments, with inadequate attention to qualifications and shades of meaning. Some important evidence is omitted.

Some newspapers have considered withholding any reports of a lengthy and complicated trial until its conclusion, when a comprehensive and balanced account can be prepared. This entails a sacrifice of competitiveness in a highly competitive field, but the Smithers case presents an argument for the system. The judge and jury had all the facts on which to make a true finding; in the court of public opinion, the same could not be said.

Tail Wind Needed To Get Bushtit Here

STRAY FEATHERS
harold hosford

Most educated guesses place the time in the early 1940s. The exact year is not important and will probably never be known, but the fact is that some time during the early years of the war, British Columbia gained a new bird.

Certainly not a momentous event when set against the backdrop of human misery rampant elsewhere in the world at the time, but it was one guaranteed to stimulate long sessions of debate and conjecture among men who remain curious about the other living things that share this planet with them.

The bird was the Bushtit, a feathered mite if there ever was one; only hummingbirds, and possibly kinglets, are smaller.

Bushtits were formerly birds of California, Oregon and southern Washington. Their centre of abundance was along the coast but they ranged inland as far as Colorado and occasionally Wyoming. They were unknown in British Columbia.

Then came the '40s and the mystery — as yet unresolved — of why the Bushtits made their move northward.

While they may have been here long before the first records revealed their presence — small size, unspectacular color and insignificant voice make a Bushtit an easy bird to overlook — they did establish their right to citizenship by allowing a nest to be discovered near Victoria in 1945.

Since then Bushtits have become a regular, even common, but certainly inconspicuous part of our bird population, settling down as permanent residents wherever they occur. So far this is on the lower mainland, around Vancouver, and on eastern Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands as far north as Comox.

After spending a few minutes watching a Bushtit you might find yourself asking the question "how did they ever get here?" When you see the size of the birds and their apparently weak, fluttering flight you can't help wondering how they could manage a flight across the street, let alone the 20-odd gruelling miles of open water they must cross to get to Vancouver Island.

One thing is sure, they must have had a tail wind, and there must have been several crossings. The arrival of two birds, of opposite sexes, and able to find each other once they got here, seems a little too fortuitous an event on which to base our present Bushtit population.

As you get to know Bushtits better you discover two things about them which are not small: their nests and their families. They seem to have an affinity for Ocean Spray and it is in one of these coastal shrubs that you will most often find their huge (relatively speaking) nests.

Bushtit nests are surprisingly solidly constructed affairs built of the most delicate materials. Oak catkins, lichens, moss and spiders' webs are the bricks and mortar of Bushtits and from these they fashion a pendant bag, often nearly a foot long, into which they place their 5 to 7 white eggs.

At first glance, the nest seems to have no entrance or exit but closer examination reveals a tiny hole — barely large enough for a human finger — near the top end of the bag.

Nesting usually begins here in late March, just after the break-up of the winter flocks, and is completed by June when — after a brief period of moult and recuperation (raising a Bushtit family can be a tiring affair) they once again re-assemble into foraging flocks that remain together until the following spring.

It is then that their weak tsits and lisps — contact calls that keep the individuals in the group in constant contact with each other — can be heard at their best and the problem of finding Bushtits becomes a little less challenging.

Japan Sees Recession Bottom Out

Japanese government officials believe their recession has bottomed out, which will be good news for British Columbia exporters.

The Japanese recession is 18 months old with a major problem being extreme inflation which hit 24 per cent in 1974.

It has been reduced to 9.5 per cent.

(This compares with a Canadian inflation rate of about 7 per cent, down from 11 per cent last year).

Orders for B.C. goods, particularly copper concentrates, had declined sharply during the recession. Coal exports had also been affected.

Now major Japanese corporations are beginning major expansion projects because of the optimism surrounding the nation's economic recovery.

The major corporations plan to spend $2.8 billion on expansion before year's end, up 40 per cent from last year. A total of $600 million will be spent for expansion by Kowasaki Steel Corp., Kobe Steel, Nippon Kokan and Nippon Steel Corporation.

Wholesale prices are stabilizing in Japan and are expected to rise 6 per cent this year and 5.8 per cent in 1976.

Toyota and Nissan (Datsun) have increasd their car production and domestic sales are up, although exports are lower than at the same time last year, reflecting the continuing recession in Europe and North America.

Toyota produced 194,529 vehicles in March, up 8 per cent from the previous March, while Nissan production totalled 166,001, up 20 per cent.

The car industry and shipyards are the major consumers of Japanese steel, which is the main industrial product of the country.

Expansion this year by Nippon Steel Corporation will protect its number one ranking is the world in terms of output.

In 1974 it produced 38 million tons, ahead of second place U.S. Steel (31 million tons) and third place Bethlehem Steel (20 million tons). Both are U.S. firms.

With Japan's inflation rate easing, labor's wage demands have also been reduced.

Contracts are being signed this spring at 14 and 15 per cent, compared with pay hikes of 33 per cent at the same time last year.

Unions are generally asking and settling for half that amount.

Despite the economic recovery, there was no indication Japan would increase its buying of B.C.'s copper concentrates before autumn.

Industry Balks Compensation For Off-Job Ills

TORONTO (CP) — Compensation costs for occupationally-related lung cancers should not be charged entirely against industry if the victims smoke heavily says an Ontario Mining Association brief.

The brief, presented to the Royal Commission on the Health and Safety of Mine Workers, said all industrial disease compensation claims should be reviewed to determine whether non-industrial exposure, such as cigarette smoking, contributed to the sickness. Where there are other contributing factors, industry should not be assessed the full conpensation costs.

Newsprint Sales Decrease 12%

MONTREAL (CP) — Sales of Canadian newsprint in April this year were 12 per cent lower than those of April, 1974, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association has announced.

The 85,000-ton decline accrued mainly from lower sales to the United States, the association said. About 75 per cent of Canadian newsprint production is exported to the U.S.

For the first four months of 1975, pulp and paper production facilities operated at 91-per-cent capacity, more than a five-per-cent drop from the corresponding period a year ago.

Inventories were 75 per cent greater than last year at the same time, said the association.

Since the beginning of the year, most pulp and paper companies have initiated temporary shutdowns to try and reduce these inventories.

Weekly Wage In Industry Passes $195

OTTAWA (CP) — The average industrial wage rose eight-tenths of one per cent to $195.54 a week in March, Statistics Canada said in a preliminary report.

The March average was 14.3 per cent above a year earlier.

The largest 12-month increase in average weekly wages was in forestry, 20.3 per cent to $267.65. The smallest was in construction, 8.3 per cent to $258.98.

business

Gregory

Gregory Industries Ltd. and its subsidiary companies report net earnings of $1,179,938 or $1.11 a share, including extraordinary items, for 1974, compared with a 1973 profit of $135,229 of 13 cents a share.

Peter Gregory, company president, said in his report to shareholders, the company had a loss before extraordinary items of $1,206,299 or $1.17 a share.

The company made an extraordinary gain of $2,386,237 on the sale of Acorn Forest Products Ltd.'s sawmill in Delta, south of here. Gregory said the mill accounted for more than 75 per cent of the 1974 operating loss and was sold in June last year.

Gregory said Gregory Industries' working capital improved to $1,534,883 by Dec. 31, 1974 compared with $43,721 at Dec. 31 a year earlier.

The company president said Acorn Timber Ltd.'s mill in Whitehorse, Y.T., had an operating loss and has been curtailed since October 1974 due to the poor lumber market. He said Field Sawmills Ltd., in Courtenay, operated at a profit during the year, contract sawing for a large Japanese trading company.

Gregory said Anacortes Lumber, Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary, had been incorporated in Washington State for the purpose of building and operating a sawmill there primarily to serve the Japanese market.

Excelsior

Excelsior Life Insurance Co., Toronto, had a statutory loss in 1974 of $10 million, compared with a profit of $1.3 milliin in 1973, the company's annual report shows.

Premium income rose to $84 million from $64.7 million and investment income increased to $25.6 million from $20.8 million.

J. W. Westaway, company chairman, said the loss resulted from rising costs from the acquisition of new business, capital losses as a result of investment sales to increase liquidity in a falling market and rising administrative costs.

New life insurance sales increased to $553.4 million from $431.6 million. Payments to policy holders were up to $52.3 million from $47.4 million.

Operating profits declined to $8.02 a share from $29.34.

Assets rose to $360.7 million from $334.8 million. Surplus at year-end declined to $9.3 million from $20.1 million.

Loblaw

Loblaw Cos. Ltd. announces a net loss of $522,000 or seven cents a share in the 12 weeks ended March 22, compared with a loss of $162,000 or 11 cents a share in the first quarter of 1974.

Sales and profit or loss of the company's various operations were: National Tea Inc. sales $339 million, loss of $600,000; Loblaw Inc. sales $94 million, profit $100,000; Tamblyn Ltd. sales $13 million, loss of $200,000; Sayvette Sales Ltd. sales $6 million, loss of $1.5 million; and Canadian wholesale, retail and other operations sales $277 million, profit $1.5 million.

The company said sales increases were recorded by all divisions except Sayvette and Tamblyn.

Home

Home Oil Co. Ltd. reports net earnings, before extraordinary items, of $6,736,000 or 83 cents a share for the three months ended March 31, compared with $5,719,000 or 70 cents a share for the same period last year.

After including extraordinary items of $626,000, net earning amounted to $7,362,000 or 90 cents a share, an increase of 43 cents a share from the same period in 1974.

The company, in its intermim report, said the extraordinary items arose prjmarily from the gain on the sale of 314,000 shares of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Ltd. for $3,160,000.

Inland

Inland Natural Gas Co. Ltd. reports revenues and expenses increased in the nine months ended March 31.

Gross revenues rose about 20 per cent to $26,228,580 from $21,471,596 in the same period of 1974. Expenses increased to $21.7 million from $16.6 million at the same time.

Net income was $3,578,958 or $1.27 a share compared with $3,379,839, or $1.09 a year earlier.

Cost of natural gas purchased in the period rose 44 per cent to $14.4 million from $10 million.

Keg

Keg Restaurants announced profits of $114,511 or three cents a share, down from $193,704 or 11 cents a share in 1973.

President George Tidball told shareholders the chain doubled the number of restaurants, but start-up costs were unexpectedly high.

He said working capital deficiency increased to $708,629 from $158,776, and doubling the number of restaurants to 16 increased the sales volume to $8.8 million in 1974 from $4.5 million in 1973.

He said a federal ban on beef imports doubled the wholesale price of the chain's specialty, sirloin steak.

Crestbrook

Crestbrook Forest Industries Ltd. showed a loss of $640,000 or 73 cents a share in the first quarter this year, president Victor Brown told the company annual meeting here.

The loss compares with a profit in the first quarter of 1974 of $1,036,000 or 51 cents a share. Sales in the most recent quarter were $11,074,000 compared with $13,003,000.

Brown said in a telephone interview after the meeting that it appears Crestbrook will have a loss year unless there is a major improvement in market conditions for lumber and pulp.

The company pulp mill at Skookumchuck is still at full capacity after a two-week shutdown in April but sawmill operations are on a four-day week.

Hudson's Bay

Hudson's Bay company reports net earnings of $723,000 for the three months ended April 30, 1975, or five cents a share, down from $2,475,000, or 18 cents a share for the comparable period of 1974.

Revenue for the first quarter $254,691,000, a 17.8 per cent increase.

Company President D. S. McGivern said although first quarter earnings were down, profits from the first three months normally represent a small fraction of annual earnings, and the percentage charges should be viewed in this context.

McGiverin said he did not expect business conditions to change greatly in the second quarter but expressed optimism for the last half of the year.

Looking at 1974, which he described as "a good year, but not quite a vintage year," Mr. McGiverin said profits were at an all-time high but were not quite as good as had been anticipated.

BOB VEDER

BEFORE THE JUDGE

District court judge William Ostler appeared in Victoria provincial court Friday to express the gratitude of the judges in the district to Brigadier Ivan Jackson, Salvation Army legal aid representative in court, who will retire this month.

"For many years I have routinely, on taking my place upon the bench in the docket court, glanced to a certain spot on the right hand side of the courtroom and have been heartened to see there, in his accustomed place, the representative of the Salvation Army, who follows a long line of Salvation Army Corrections Officers, all of whom have earned my regard and respect," Ostler said.

Jackson attends court each day and advises prisoners on how to obtain legal aid, "never failing to respond when the court requires help for an unfortunate and turns instinctively to the man in the Salvation Army uniform who sits in his accustomed place awaiting the call to service."

A 31-year-old man was sentenced to 45 days in jail after he pleaded guilty to being unlawfully at large from Jordan River forestry camp.

John Leonard Wigglesworth of 1752 Carrick had been issued a two-day pass from Jordan River Wednesday morning to visit his family in Victoria. But he failed to return to the camp by 8 p.m. Thursday and was arrested in his Victoria home.

The reason Wigglesworth gave for not making it back to the camp was that he "just got drunk and passed out."

Prosecutor Peter Birkett asked for a substantial sentence to impress upon Wigglesworth and others like him that they are jeopardizing the day pass program by not returning.

Wigglesworth was serving a six-month jail term levied Feb. 2, 1975 for breaking and entering and theft. Sentence was due to expire June 13.

Three 17-year-old youths pleaded guilty to breaking and entering Tuesday into Pacific 66 Service Station, 1025 Hillside, with intent to commit theft.

Carl Bamforth and John Barrett, both of no fixed address, and Ricky McIntyre, of 2517 Blanshard, asked that presentence reports be drawn up. McIntyre was remanded to June 3 for sentencing while Bamforth and Barrett were remanded to June 24 for sentencing.

Bamforth and Barrett are also charged with attempting to break into Fairfield Shell Station, 1090 Fairfield, and possession of housebreaking instruments. They were arrested last Saturday and pleaded not guilty to both charges Friday. Preliminary hearing is set for August 12 and 13.

All three youths remain in custody.

Bamforth and Barrett, who were released on their own recognizance in the sum of $1,000 last Saturday on the attempted breaking and entering charge, were refused bail Tuesday on the breaking and entering with intent charge.

McIntyre, who was not charged in the Saturday break-in, was released Tuesday on his own recognizance in the sum of $1,000, only to be sentenced later that day to four months in jail for theft of a car Jan. 23 and possession of marijuana Feb. 2. At the time of these offences, he was on probation for another matter.

Elizabeth Ames, 39, of 608 Head, was granted a conditional discharge after pleading guilty to common assault. The condition is four months of probation and to keep the peace.

Birkett said Ames' next-door-neighbor asked her to tell her daughter to stop throwing rocks. Ames grabbed the neighbor by the neck and punched her in the eye.

Defence lawyer Jaspar Bomhoff told the court Ames realizes it was wrong to be the first one to strike but was provoked by the "foul language" the neighbor used at her daughter.

He said there has been a long-standing dispute between the two parties but since the assault May 15, Ames has put up a fence between her property and that of her neighbor.

★ ★ ★

Birkett said Leason had a dispute over a game of pool with Terrance Lang at the Halfway House, 356 Esquimalt Road, May 12. Leason struck Lang in the face with his fists. Lang received facial lacerations and broken teeth, Birkett said.

Leason told the court Lang had picked up a cue stick to strike him so he struck first.

Provincial Court Judge Fred Green said because the crown did not dispute Leason's story, a jail term would not be imposed.

★ ★ ★

Green refused to allow Colin McArthur, 20, of 352 Wilson, to change a plea of not guilty to guilty in a charge of obtaining transportation by fraud April 2.

McArthur said he wished to change his original plea because he could not afford to hire a lawyer to defend him and is not entitled to legal aid because he has a job.

"Is that the only reason you wish to plead guilty," Green asked.

"Yes," said McArthur.

"You may not be entitled to legal aid but you are entitled to a trial because I cannot accept your reason for pleading guilty," Green said.

Despite McArthur's protests, trial date was set for July 7.

In trial court, Judge William Ostler sentenced James Richard Walker, 20, of 1202 Fort, to 20 days in jail and placed him on a one-year probation term.

Walker was found guilty following trial May 20 on a charge of assaulting a peace officer April 26.

"It is fortunate he missed and only hit the stomach area."

Police had been attempting to stop a fight between Walker and a woman in the 600 block Garbally.

A 15-year-old boy, who was raised from juvenile to adult court on charges of theft and possession of stolen stereo equipment valued at $700 was sentenced by Ostler to 12 months definite, 12 months indefinite in jail.

Oil Deficit Seen

VANCOUVER (CP) — D. D. Lougheed, vice-president of Imperial Oil Ltd., told the British Columbia Energy Commission on Friday that the province will be in a net deficit energy position in gas and oil by 1985.

The commission is holding hearings into natural gas pricing.

Lougheed, brother of Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed, also said Canadians would be paying the world price of more than $11 a barrel for oil.

He said B.C. was getting about 60 per cent of its oil requirements, or 75,000 barrels a day, from Alberta and he predicted the demand would increase until B.C. was in a net deficit energy position.

Police Lost Their Case For Failing to Apologize

VANCOUVER (CP) — Valmond Romilly, a Smithers lawyer, was awarded $300 damages Friday when Mr. Justice E. E. Hinkson ruled in British Columbia Supreme Court that Romilly had been unlawfully imprisoned by three Vancouver police officers.

Mr. Justice Hinkson ruled Romilly was compelled to bring the action for false imprisonment because the police refused him an apology. Romilly is black.

The judge said Romilly had vindicated his position and awarded him the $300 and costs against constables Brian Weatherhead, Donald McLean and Michael Carpenter.

The action arose out of the arrest of Romilly Oct. 12, 1974, when he was stopped by constables Weatherhead and McLean who were looking for a man wanted on an outstanding warrant for possession of marijuana.

Mr. Justice Hinkson said that when the police asked Romilly his name he said he had no identification and that he wasn't required to produce any.

The judge said this course of action served to excite the suspicion of the two officers who took him to police headquarters.

It was there that Romilly produced a business card and said he had an appointment and was going to leave the room but his way was blocked by Constable Carpenter.

Subsequently, through contact with Vancouver lawyer Don Rosenbloom, Romilly's identity was established and he asked to be transported to the point on Granville Street where he had been arrested.

This request was refused by a police inspector and later when Romilly sought an apology from police officials they declined to make one.

"At that stage the present dispute might have been resolved amicable upon the basis of an apology," said Mr. Justice Hinkson.

He said Constable Carpenter, in blocking Romilly's path, participated in what had become an unlawful imprisonment.

Mr. Justice Hinkson said police satisfied him they had reasonable grounds to believe they had encountered a wanted man but when that belief was dispelled they continued to restrain the plaintiff and thereby falsely imprisoned him.

Spirit of London Cruises Again as Sun Princess

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British liner Sun Princess, formerly Spirit of London, will open the Princess Cruises and Pando Lines' Alaska cruise season on Tuesday when it sails from here.

The 17,000-ton cruise ship will arrive Tuesday morning from Los Angeles where it had been based for the winter Mexican cruise season.

Last October, as the familiar Spirit of London, the ship emerged from Yarrow's shipyard in Victoria as the Sun Princess, following a $1 million refit.

Gage Retires

VANCOUVER (CP) — University of British Columbia students and staff showered retiring president Walter Gage with streamers and confetti on Friday.

The demonstration took place at the end of the third and final day of the university's spring graduation exercises.

As Dr. Gage proceeded out of the gymnasium where the exercises were held he greeted many of the assembled graduates. He had earlier shaken hands with them all as they officially received their degrees.

After six years as president, Dr. Gage will be succeeded on July 1 by Douglas Kenny, Dean of the Faculty of Arts.

University Chancellor Nathan Nemetz, chief justice of the B.C. Supreme Court, officially stepped down as chancellor at Friday's ceremony. He was succeeded by Donovan Miller who confered an honorary Doctor of Laws degree on Mr. Justice Nemetz.

Dockers' Award

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mr. Justice Peter Seaton of the British Columbia appeal court Friday awarded about 4,000 B.C. longshoremen a wage settlement which they'd earlier turned down.

Mr. Justice Seaton added a cost-of-living clause to protect the longshoremen in the event that the national index rises more than 11 per cent between April this year and April, 1976.

The judge was appointed to bring in a binding settlement for longshoremen and longshore foremen after the strike and Parliament ordered them back to work.

Regular longshoremen recently voted by more than a 50-per-cent majority to reject the wage offer of $1.95 an hour during 1975 and 1976.

Mr. Justice Seaton's decision gives the regular longshoremen an increase of $1.15 an hour to $7.23 for the basic day shift this year and 80 cents more in 1976 for an $8.03 total.

Six-Year Terms

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two men who pleaded guilty to selling a pound of cocaine to an undercover RCMP constable for $17,000 last September were sentenced Friday by Mr. Justice R. P. Anderson to six years each.

The wife of one of the men was given two years of probation after pleading guilty to trafficking with her husband in an ounce of cocaine.

A third man who pleaded guilty to selling the same constable an ounce of cocaine Aug. 24, 1974 for $1,500 followed by another ounce a month later was given five years on each charge. The sentences are concurrent.

Fire Contained

FORT NELSON (CP) — The provincial forest service said Friday a 10,000-acre fire which had broken out 25 miles north of Fort Nelson had been contained. To date 298 fires have occurred in the province compared with 107 in the corresponding period of 1974. Fire suppression costs are $267,425 in 1975 compared with $76,542 in the same period last year.

Degree Program

KELOWNA (CP) — Simon Fraser University will offer a degree-completion program in September in connection with the Okanagan College, Pauline Jewett, SFU president, said Friday.

The program, the first of its kind in British Columbia, will enable third and fourth year biology and psychology students to obtain degrees after attending Simon Fraser courses at the Kelowna Campus of Okanagan College. All programs will be taught by SFU staff who will live here temporarily.

Plane Crash Kills 3 Men

SEATTLE (AP) — A light plane with five skydivers aboard crashed into Tiger Mountain east of Issaquah Thursday night, killing three and injuring the other two, Federal Aviation Administration officials said.

The pilot, Ronald Hermann, 28 of Whidbey Island, was reported in serious condition in a Seattle hospital while Craig Fronk, 23, of Lynnwood, Wash., was listed in satisfactory condition.

Search and rescue workers were carried by jeep to the heavily wooded site of the crash. The two injured men were flown to a hospital by a Ft. Lewis army helicopter, officials said.

CIA's Plans to Kill Castro Bared

WASHINGTON — Plans for removing Cuban Premier Fidel Castro by any means, including assassination, were developed in response to orders originating with President John F. Kennedy, says retired Maj.-Gen. Edward Lansdale.

"I was working for the highest authority in the land," Lansdale said of the secret project which he described as "a feasibility study" of ways to get rid of Castro.

The onetime air force officer said in a telephone interview Friday he knew of no attempts against Castro's life that were initiated as a result of his study.

However, one source familiar with the tentative findings of the Rockefeller commission, which is investigating alleged CIA involvement in assassination, said he has been told of "two or three' subsequent U.S.-sponsored efforts to kill Castro.

When Lansdale was assigned the task in 1962, he was listed as an assistant to then-Defence Secretary Robert McNamara. However, Lansdale said he was working on the project for the president at the request of an intermediary whom he declined to name.

Lansdale said he was assigned to the project in 1962 when the U.S. first received intelligence that Castro was prepared to install Soviet-made nuclear missiles in Cuba.

Last week, The Associated Press identified Lansdale as the author of an August, 1962, memo which informed sources said provided the CIA with authority to develop contingency plans for the assassination of Castro.

Lansdale said he did not remember the memo, but he acknowledged that it would not have been "incompatible" with his assigned task.

Informed sources also claim the FBI alerted Robert Kennedy in May 1961 that the Central Intelligence Agency was involved in backstage dealings with the Mafia.

The warning was sent down in a secret memo from then-FBI Director Edgar Hoover and, the sources said, reflected information gleaned from the FBI's surveillance of Chicago racketeer Sam Giancana.

The document is now in the hands of the Rockefeller commission and the Senate committee on intelligence operations.

Hoover's concern about CIA dealings with the Mafia was sparked by the 1960 surveillance of comedian Dan Rowan in Las Vegas, which was apparently arranged by the CIA as a favor to Giancana.

Informed sources have said that all anti-Castro operations during the Kennedy administration were directed by a special cabinet-level group headed by then-Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and known by the code name Operation Mongoose.

The commission headed by Vice-President Rockefeller is reported to have obtained the minutes of an Aug. 10, 1962, meeting of this group which indicate the subject of assassination was discussed.

The Lansdale memo providing authority for drawing up contingency plans for the possible assassination of Castro was issued two days later, sources have told The Associated Press.

One informed source close to the Rockefeller commission said William Harvey "handled the CIA end of the Mongoose Operation. I'm told he did two or three things that were designed to assassinate Castro."

The source added, however that he could not say for certain whether the Rockefeller commission has been able to establish any connection between the Aug. 10 meeting, the Lansdale memo and the alleged assassination attempts under Harvey.

BILLS PASS SPEEDILY

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons closed the week with a flurry of activity Friday, giving final reading to bills that would increase judges' salaries, create two northern Senate seats and crack down on ocean polluters.

The three bills, none highly controversial, zipped through with little debate as attendance sagged to its usual end-of-the-week low. Only a handful of MPs were present for the passage of each.

All must have royal assent before becoming law.

But there was scattered criticism of the proposal to enlarge the 102-seat appointed Senate by opening two seats for the North—one each for the Yukon and Northwest-Territories.

Ian Watson (L-Laprairie), who spoke against the proposal earlier, again urged Senate reform before new appointments are made.

Wally Firth (NDP-Northwest Territories) said the bill should be scrapped and, in its place, an ombudsman should be appointed to hear grievances against the government by northerners. The NDP has long favored Senate abolition.

The pay bill, which would raise judges' salaries in some cases by up to 72 per cent, was generally approved. The top judge, Supreme Court Chief Justice Bora Laskin, will have his pay increased to $68,000 annually from $50,000 if the bill completes remaining stages of passage unchanged.

The third bill, would bring Canadian ocean pollution laws into line with those in a number of other countries.

If passed unaltered, it would make it illegal for any ship in Canadian or international waters to dump waste or pollutants withaut a permit from the federal environment minister.

Heroin Panic In Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — An unprecedented shortage of heroin is beginning to cause panic among the city's addict population, an RCMP drug squad officer said in the B.C. supreme court.

Sergeant Stan Domansky told the court that in the wake of a massive police crackdown on trafficking, addicts now are forced to pay inflated prices for heavily-diluted, low-grade heroin.

"The panic is beginning to be felt on the street," Sgt. Domansky told Mr. Justice R. P. Anderson.

He said recent analyses of heroin capsules, now selling on the street at $30 to $35 a cap, have revealed a heroin content as low as two per cent.

Three years ago, when a single cap cost $15, analysis by police indicated that the quality reaching the street was as high as 70 per cent heroin, Sgt. Domansky said.

He was testifying at a presentence hearing for four persons who have all pleaded guilty to trafficking in cocaine.

The defendants are: Nigel Howse, 25; Herman Edward Perteet, 26; Margaret Anne Perteet, 24; and Robert James Watt, 24, all of Vancouver.

They were arrested here last October following a four-month undercover operation in which RCMP constable Chris Picard posed as a drug buyer from Montreal.

Prosecutor Ross Lander told the court that Sgt. Domansky's testimony was intended to show the extent to which the illicit drug trade, including cocaine, has grown in Vancouver.

Sgt. Domansky said that between 1966 and 1970 the RCMP Vancouver drug squad didn't encounter any cocaine trafficking during its undercover operations.

The RCMP made no marijuana arrests in 1966, made 350 to 400 in 1967 and 1,200 in 1968, he said, adding that LSD and speed became prevalent the same year.

No Witchhunt Of Refugees—Andras

OTTAWA (CP) — There is no witchhunt against Vietnamese refugees in Canada despite the controversy over General Dan Van Quang, Immigration Minister Robert Andras said Friday.

Most refugees "seem to be very fine people" and they should not fear repercussions because of questions raised about Gen. Quang, he told reporters.

The government is gathering information from several sources on Gen. Quang, a controversial former South Vietnamese officer living in Montreal. He has been linked in news reports with heroin smuggling and other corrupt practices.

Andras said he is trying to compile "maximum information" and hopes to make a decision soon on whether to let the general remain in Canda.

He said the government decided before the Communist takeover in South Vietnam to cut through red tape and deal with refugees on a humanitarian basis.

There are always isolated cases called into question in any refugee movement, he said.

U.S. Medic Strike Spreads

By The Associated Press

The spreading United States malpractice insurance crisis that began four weeks ago in California has moved into New York and parts of Texas and threatens to involve Rhode Island within 10 days.

Physicians in New York, angered over the state legislature's approach to the malpractice situation, were expected to begin a slowdown during the weekend that could curtail even emergency surgery in some areas.

In Fort Worth, anethtetists planned to join those in San Antonio in a work stoppage protesting the Texas legislature's failure to deal with high malpractice insurance rates.

Rhode Island Gov. Philip Noel said he is willing to call a special legislative session to avert a crisis situation in his state.

And the California Medical Association holds its first special session in 30 years today with the topic of discussion being malpractice insurance.

Carl Goetsch, president of the OMA, said delegates will push for legislative reforms to protect doctors against malpractice suits.

Meanwhile, legislative action to give doctors malpractice insurance at reduced rates for the rest of the year is expected to induce most striking physicians to go back to work Monday.

However, some doctors are dissatisfied with the agreement worked out between medical leaders and the legislature and plan to continue the walkout.

The strike has take a financial toll at hospitals in the state. The 11 major hospitals in San Francisco say they lost $2.4 million during the walkout, and the 115 affected hospitals in southern California estimate losses at $10 million.

"We are not on strike," said Dr. James Irvine, director of anethesiology at All Saints Hospital one of four in Fort Worth expected to be hit by the slowdown. "We are being forced out of work because of the astronomical malpractice insurance rates."

Irvine said the inaction would not affect true emergencies.

Anesthetists in San Antonia voted Thursday night to suspend all work in the city's Hospitals except for emergency surgery.

N. Korea Runs Ad For Unity

NEW YORK (UPI) — A full page advertisement by North Korea printed in today's New York Times stressed that the possible reunification of the two Koreas rests in the hands of the United States.

The advertisement quoted North Korean President Kim Il Sung's speech before the central committee of the Communist Party of China on April 18, 1975. Parts of the speech already have reached western sources.

According to the ad, Kim said the future of North and South Korea rests with "the attitude of the United States, which actually holds all power in South Korea."

Kim added that "U.S. imperialism must desist from its aggressive ambition to rig up 'two Koreas' and take up South Korea as its premanent colony and military base, and must get out of South Korea.

The advertisement also excerpted two 1974 Kim speeches given in Pyongyang. The Times recently has printed similar advertisements submitted by various North Korean agencies. Saturday's advertisement was submitted by the Korean information office in Stockholm.

LEISURE POST FILLED BY PROF

A University of B.C. professor has been appointed to a new position of associate deputy minister in charge of leisure services in the provincial government.

Dr. Eric Broom, associate professor of the school physical education and recreation at UBC, will take up his new job in the provincial secretary's office July 1.

His new job will involve planning and co-ordinating leisure services provided by government.

"My role will be partly catalytic in nature, helping other agencies to maximize the provision of leisure opportunities to British Columbians through grant aid and service," said Broom.

His salary has not yet been fixed.

Bathroom Humor In the House

The provincial government's free toilet legislation won approval in principle in record time Friday with all opposition party spokesmen in support.

But NDP backbencher Daisy Webster—widely-appreciated for first advocating the move, which orders locks removed from pay toilets within one month of the act becoming law—was not spared the expected amusing cracks from opposition ranks.

As the Vancouver south MLA stood to comment on the bill, she was laughingly accused of "flushing with success."

ADMISSION FEE TO NEW YORK CITY, BUT LEAVING IS FREE

By CHRISTOPHER PRITCHETT

NEW YORK (Reuter) — It costs a motorist nothing to leave New York City but the admission charge is going up.

The aim is to raise money to improve mass transit. However, the idea has upset the thousands of people who enter the city every day to work and politicians, ever wary of the consequences, have reduced the increase.

The admission charge is the toll levied by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey on vehicles using the bridges and tunnels across the Hudson River.

Six crossings are involved, ranging from the heavily-used George Washington Bridge and the Lincoln and Holland Tunnels, to links between New Jersey and Staten Island. They were used by almost 160 million vehicles last year.

The port authority—a massive organization "belonging" to both states and operator of John F. Kennedy, LaGuardia and Newark Airports, the docks and the biggest building in New York, the twin-towered World Trade Centre—stunned the public by announcing earlier this month that tolls for commuters would be trebled, while those paid by other motorists would be increased by half.

The authority said its decision—made without warning or any public hearings—would help raise an extra $39 million to be spent on expanding its big bus terminal in Manhattan, building rail links to Kennedy and Newark airports and other improvements in mass transit.

Since the Holland Tunnel from New Jersey to lower Manhattan opened in 1927, the round-trip cash toll has been $1. For the last few years this has been collected only on the New Jersey side. Motorists leaving Manhattan do not pay on the assumption that they came from New Jersey in the first place.

The port authority decided to abolish this 50-cent toll and set a standard charge of $1.50. It proposed a 50-cent fee, however, for cars containing three people to encourage car-pooling.

There has been little objection to these objectives. One anti-pollution group even said the new tolls would not be high enough and called for a $2 charge on each side of the Hudson.

But the suddenness of the decision infuriated motorists. Legislators rushed to show solidarity with them with both New York and New Jersey state assemblies condemning the move.

A group of teachers who live in New Jersey but work on Staten Island drove slowly in convoy across one bridge in protest, tying up rush-hour traffic.

Others said the new tolls were discriminatory, especially for shift workers who have to drive to work at times when there are few buses or trains. They said it would not be possible to form car pools outside normal working hours—and the three-passenger concession did not apply at weekends.

So the tolls were revised by the authority under the threat of a veto by the governors of the two states.

Rude Remarks Agitate Rugby Oldsters

Crying "cheap politics," all those rugby-playing Oliver Hardys are inviting Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen and Ald. Mike Young to take part in their weekly training sessions.

And I believe it's up to them both to accept the invitation.

Of course, both of them almost certainly won't accept. But they've stuck their necks out with statements that are inaccurate, misleading and in poor taste. And I think they have to do something to make up for those statements.

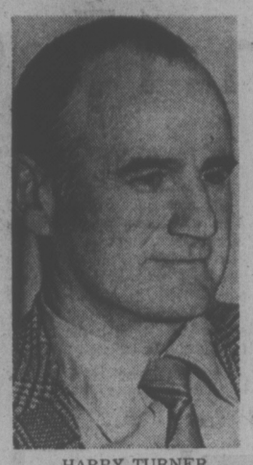
It all erupted during last week's city council debate when Young accused the finance committee of helping "pot-bellied" politicians play rugby while giving only niggardly assistance to junior golfers.

The committee had recommended that a $200 grant be given to the Royal Canadian Golf Association, to defray organization costs for the Canadian junior and juvenile golf championships to be played at Gorge Vale Golf Club Aug. 26 to 30. The association had asked for $500 and Young wanted to know why only half that sum was recommended for approval.

Young recalled that earlier this year the council had handed over $250 to the Ebb Tide Rugby Football Club, a group of "prosperous, pot-bellied businessmen and politicians," to help the club host an over-40 match and tour by the visiting Fuwakw Club of Japan.

That was just a weekend visit, said Young, yet the city was proposing to give an equal amount to a national sporting event lasting an entire week and attracting more than 70 young participants.

Mayor Pollen joined in the fray with a stab at portly rugby-playing Premier Dave Barrett when he said the purpose of the support for the rugby club was "to try to



HARRY TURNER
. . . players agitated

"It was a total waste of money," Pollen added.

Anyway, Young made his point — at the expense of the members of the Ebb Tide Club. Council approved the full $500 grant for the golfers.

That's fine. The rugby oldsters don't object to that. They've got nothing against golf and nothing against youth. But they are upset about the slur against them. And I don't blame them.

Both Victoria Rugby Union president Don Burgess and Ebb Tide Club president and team captain Harry Turner were furious about the remarks. And both have written strong letters to the council.

Points out Burgess, an extremely active 43-year-old schoolteacher: "the ill-chosen comments attributed to Mayor Pollen and his would-be successor Ald. Mike Young were quite unfortunate and only demonstrate further our national apathy toward physical activity at any age level.

"In an era in which only two to three per cent of the Canadian population takes part in some form of weekly physical conditioning, it is rather sad that our inert senior city officials choose to take cheap shots at our premier and at the same time disparage the efforts of the over-40 Ebb Tide members.

"The Ebb Tide contribution to local rugby has been very considerable and goes far beyond a weekend visit by 64 members of the Fuwaku Club of Japan, who incidentally contributed the better part of $10,000 to local hotels and merchants during their three-day stay."

Turner, a 48-year-old deputy commissioner in the B.C. government's superannuation branch, says all those associated with the Ebb Tide Club "are extremely agitated" over the rude remarks.

"It is alarming that elected officials can be so irresponsible in making derogative statements about Victoria area taxpayers to support council arguments," he says.

Apart from the "rudeness" there were a lot of other things wrong with Young's remarks.

For one thing, Premier Barrett isn't a member of the Ebb Tide Club. In fact, he plays for a similar club in Vancouver. And, as Turner points out, there are no politicians playing and "we do not participate in politics."

I don't know about abounding prosperity, but a look down the club membership list shows few businessmen. There are teachers, carpenters and electricians. And there's a librarian, and a lineman with B.C. Hydro. And so on.

"The Ebb Tide (over-40) Rugby Club played 22 games last season against league, junior representative and high school teams," points out Turner. "Our membership consists of former rugby players over 40 years of age from all walks of life, including businessmen, who are concerned about their physical fitness."

"Our organization is doing something, not talking, about the deplorable physical condition of middle-aged Canadians. The physical fitness of a 30-year-old Canadian is reported to be equivalent to that of a 60-year-old Swede."

Turner, who has been president of the Victorian Rugby Union and chairman of the Referees Association, started playing again when the club was formed in 1972. Then he weighed in at 210 pounds and now he has trimmed that, "simply through the involvement with physical activity," to 182 pounds.

"We are very serious about this thing," Turner says. "We have another Japanese team coming over in April, 1976, and in September, '76, a B.C. over-40 team will tour Britain. These matches are of a pretty high calibre.

"Right now we're getting correspondence from Argentina, France, Germany, South Africa and the United Kingdom, showing interest in our over-40 program."

DON BURGESS
. . . national apathy

Ebb Tide, like other rugby clubs, has no sponsors and, as Turner points out, requested financial assistance from the city only when staging an international event.

"Our own 49 members personally contributed $1,574 solely for the purpose of entertaining the Japanese party," he says. "We appreciated the concern of the City Fathers and the grant of $250 nearly covered the rental of Royal Athletic Park of $294.35."

"The city council need not have approved our grant, but once it had done so, we would have assumed that it was made in the sincere intention of assisting our organization."

The rugby tour was an international event extended over a period of 11 days in B.C., including three days in Victoria, "during which 64 Japanese and 49 Victorians took part," says Turner.

The Ebb Tide-Fuwaku match in Victoria drew about 500 and the standard of rugby was high.

Statements like those of Young can only hurt the club's bid to get public support for future matches. An apology is called for. But then, the men of the council could go down and learn the true facts the hard way.

In a letter to the editor of the Times, Turner invites Young to attend the workouts and says "I am sure that many of us would like to show him how active a 'pot-bellied businessman' can be."

And Burgess says the Ebb Tide players would, "I am sure," provide adequate medical assistance should either of them (Pollen or Young) not be able to stand the pace."

So how about it Mayor Pollen and Ald. Young? Feel like putting your boots where your mouths are?

John Howard Society Strapped

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

The future of the John Howard Society of Vancouver Island has never looked bleaker.

Strapped for money, largely foresaken by its erstwhile supporter the United Way, and with a depleted staff, the society faces the most critical period in its 30-plus year history.

According to its president, Margaret Heseltine, the society will make one last-ditch effort to convince the government and community funding bodies that its financial problems are real and serious; failing that it will either have to fold or consider amalgamating with the John Howard Society of B.C.

Since the beginning of 1973 the fortunes of the Vancouver Island society, dedicated to helping the Island's prison inmates, have gone steadily downhill.

In March of that year it suffered a double blow. First its executive director Michael Bennett resigned to take a job at William Head federal prison. Then the United Way announced it was stopping core funding and would only ensure grants for specific projects.

Bennett has never been replaced, leaving the society without executive direction. And in the past two years the United Way has made only two grants to the society — one for $6,000 towards Conarts, a store selling hobbycrafts made by William Head inmates, and the other for $1,250 for public information and education.

Although the provincial government has more than doubled its grants to offset the loss in United Way support, there is a catch. In the transition, the government this year gave notive all funds would come through the corrections branch and would be based on a 20-per-cent increase in the amount the society had received the year before from the provincial secretariat. The catch is a grant which had been funded through the department of human resources to operate the Campbell River area council of the society was simply cut off.

"Instead of getting more we're now going to be getting less," Miss Heseltine said in an interview Friday.

In 1974 the provincial grants totalled $51,000. This year the provincial grant is $48,900, and instead of being dispensed in a lump sum will be issued in three equal payments at four-month intervals.

The society's administrative secretary, Mrs. June Young, said the budget this year though "pared down to the absolute minimum" still has come to $73,000.

It includes $15,000 for the Campbell River council, $13,500 for the council in Nanaimo and $14,632 for the one in Victoria. In addition there is $33,000 for administrative costs.

The budget allows for a community planner this year who would act as director of the society's activities.

But because of its precarious financial state the society has held off advertising the position.

Miss Heseltine said the budget has taken into consideration federal funding which last year amounted to $17,635. However, there is still no guarantee Ottawa will come through with another grant this year.

The difference between what the society receives from the two levels of government and its budget requirements will have to be made up by community funding sources, Mrs. Young said.

United Way won't fund operating costs. And yet John Howard Society, because it is a member of the United Way, cannot, as a condition of its membership, directly solicit funds on its own from the community to cover operating expenses.

The lack of funds has resulted in a steady attrition of personnel. Whereas the Victoria office of the society once had five paid employees — a director, two case workers and two secretaries — it now has only one, Mrs. Young. She is trying to cover all roles but it's an impossible task.

Miss Heseltine said the society has been reduced to an answering service, a referral agency. Many of the programs they would like to be involved in have had to be set aside for the time being.

The answer may lie in amalgamation with the John Howard Society of B.C. from which the Island group broke away in the early 40's over differences among members of the board of directors. Miss Heseltine said she welcomes negotiations but is not committed to amalgamation until she learns what proposals the B.C. group will make.

As if the society's financial problems are not bad enough it is now beginning to feel the squeeze from government — both federal and provincial — which is starting to take over many of the services John Howard has traditionally provided.

Society members have approached the government for suggestions on what their new role should be. So far the government has indicated a need for counselling services at the Wilkinson Road remand centre and help in establishing community residential centres.

"We should have one more try," Miss Heseltine said. "We must resolve amalgamation or try to get a director to see if we can't develop innovative schemes.

"If time shows there is no longer a need for the John Howard Society then I am not one to perpetuate something not wanted.

Testimony Conflicts In Murder Trial

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

Cross-examination of a key crown witness resumed Friday following submission to B.C. Supreme Court of a signed statement in which Curtis William Christie admitted to stabbing Stanford Clarence Wray, 53, last Oct. 15

Questioning of Donald Charles McCrae was halted earlier in the week following which defence counsel Doug Christie withdrew and was replaced by Dr. J. J. Gow.

Christie, 19, is accused of murder punishable by life imprisonment in the death of Wray. The case is being heard by Mr. Justice Harry McKay and a jury.

McCrae, an admitted seller and user of heroin, testified Tuesday that he lent Christie a knife similar to one introduced as evidence at the trial. Both men had been drinking at the Century Inn beer parlor.

When cross-examination resumed Friday, McCrae agreed that heroin affects judgment and memory, that he had taken three or four caps of heroin that day, and that the combined effect of heroin and alcohol is fairly powerful.

You had a fair amount to drink that evening, asked Gow.

"You could say that, yes," replied McCrae.

By 1 a.m. you had drunk so much you were affected by it?

"You could say that, yes."

Dealing with the knife, Gow asked if Christie didn't tell McCrae he wanted it as protection because he wanted to collect a debt owing him.

"No, he wanted to go and roll a drunk, that is what he wanted a knife for."

Gow then referred to McCrae's earlier testimony in which he said Christie had left the Century Inn beer parlor once and he thought he had "gone to collect his money."

That means to collect something that was his?

"That is not the way I meant it. The guy could have owed the money, I don't know."

You said at the preliminary hearing he borrowed the knife to collect a debt?

"Yes."

Was the answer true and correct?

"I guess not," replied McCrae, adding he was coming off methadone at the time.

Asked again if it was a truthful answer, he said "to the best of my ability at the time, yes."

And the reason you used the phrase "gone to collect his money" in the B.C. Supreme Court trial this week was because Christie told you he wanted to collect a debt, as you told the court at the preliminary heaing?

"It's possible but I don't think so."

You thought so at the preliminary hearing, didn't you?

"You could say that, I guess."

It was the truth then?

"To the best of my ability."

McCrae agreed that the phrase "roll a drunk" means to rob him. He also agreed that the phrase is often said jokingly.

Earlier Friday, evidence was given of a police interview and a signed statement by Christie, Oct. 15 and 16 in which he confessed to stabbing Wray in the chest with a knife while they were in a car stopped at Fernwood and Grant.

Christie said he had been drinking at the King's Hotel and Century Inn beer parlors and left the latter at closing time "with the old man" who was "looking for a girl and I knew a party where there would be some."

Wray stopped the car, started punching him, grabbed his hair and threatened him.

Christie said he tried punching the man but kept hitting the steering wheel, then took out the knife and "I poked him, I don't know where. I just knew it was in. I felt a jerk in my hand. I pulled it out."

He ran ran round to the driver's side, took the man's shirt off and said "let's go down to my place." (Christie lived at 1303 Gladstone, two blocks away).

He laid Wray down on Grant Street, checked for a heartbeat and there was none. "I panicked, grabbed the sweater and ran, to my apartment."

He remembered taking Wray's wallet but there was no money in it.

"I didn't mean to kill him or stab him. I was going to try to help him. I mean, or I wouldn't have tried to help him after, if I tried to kill him or if I wanted to kill him."

City detective Douglas Richardson said Christie told him he didn't have the knife to use on Wray but to collect some money a person owed him who had a friend "who packs a gun. I had the knife for self-protection."

Christie said, according to Richardson, that the money was owing from a drug sale.

Detective Blake Green agreed under cross-examination that he had said Christie couldn't free himself from the struggle with Wray.

Gow suggested that Christie said he couldn't get free from Wray and in trying to get free the stabbing occurred.

Green replied that his notes show Christie saying " . . . I tried to break loose but he was too strong."

At the start of Friday's session, Gow said he and the crown had agreed on the form of admission of facts.

He told the jury this is provided for in the Criminal Code, that, where an accused is on trial, he or his counsel may admit any fact for the purpose of dispensing with proof.

On Christie's instructions, these admissions of fact were made:

—That, on or about the night of Oct. 14, Christie was at the beer parlor of the Century Inn;

—That Christie, while at this beer parlor Oct. 14, borrowed a knife from McCrae;

—That Christie, on the morning of Oct. 15, did stab Wray in the chest with a knife borrowed from McCrae and thereby did kill Wray.

The trial will continue Monday.

Up, Up And . . . Oops

Two young men who tried to steal a private float plane from the Victoria Flying Services dock opposite the legislative buildings in the Inner Harbor Friday afternoon didn't get very far.

Spotting the key left in the ignition they climbed into the plane, started the engine and were about to taxi away when they realized they hadn't cast off the mooring line.

The men, described as between 18 and 22, leapt from the plane and ran off. Wintell gave chase but lost them as they fled west along Belleville.

Victoria police were unable to locate the suspects.

Winery Plans Retail Store

Victoria's only winery will take advantage of new provincial legislation to establish its own plant retail store for direct sales to the public.

But a spokesman for Castle Wines Ltd. at 3948 Quadra warned wine lovers Friday not to raise their hopes that this bypassing regular liquor outlets will result in cheaper wine products.

Manager Bob Holt said as far as he's aware the regulations governing in-plant stores have yet to be drafted, but he suspects the government may fix a uniform retail price across the province, "whether they are selling it or not."

Holt also said the company plans to offer guided tours around the plant and offer visitors wine samples, as permitted by the new legislation.

"But as far as things to see, one should bear in mind that a winery is substantially a tank farm and a warehouse," he said.

Although bottling is in progress throughout the year, he thought the fall season would be the peak time for tours, when crushing is in full swing.

A full refurbishing of the plant is now under way, Holt said, and a suitable area has been earmarked as a "host room and retail outlet."

Boy, 2, Dies Of Injuries

Saanich police said the child was attempting to cross the road when he was hit by car driven by Elizabeth Laronde, 54, of 4034 Hollydene.

Coroner Edmond St. Jorre has not advised whether he intends to hold an inquest or inquiry into the fatality.

Oak Bay Presented $5,000

An eight foot long by three foot high plywood cheque for $5,000 was presented to Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith as part of the Oak Bay Tea Party opening ceremonies today.

The money, raised by the Oak Bay Kiwanis Club, will be used by the municipality to buy "amenities" for Oak Bay's new recreation centre, a club spokesman said.

The club spokesman said the Kiwanis will have discussions later with the recreation commission on exactly what amenities will be bought.

Gilmour Appointed In Taxi Dispute

Provincial mediator Clark Gilmour has been appointed to mediate the contract dispute between the C and C Transportation Co. and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers Union.

C and C, Victoria's only union taxi company, employs about 50 drivers. The first meeting between the company, the union and Gilmour will be held June 9, union business agent Jim Grealy said.

Gilmour will also sit as mediator in a dispute between the CBRT and the provincially-owned Vancouver Island Coach Lines. The CBRT represents 150 office staff and drivers of the bus line.

The mediation talks in that dispute will start June 11.

Ask The Times

Q. Can you tell me the name of the lovely, tiny mauve flowers seen at this time of the year on boulevards in the Uplands. Where can I purchase some seed. — A.C.C.

A. The name of the flower is Slender Speedwell (veronica filiformis). Some people treat it as a weed, but others consider it too pretty to eradicate. The plant originates from the Mediterranean but was probably introduced from Britain for a rock garden. It does not produce any seeds but propagates itself vegetively. That is, when the plant is cut some of the pieces root themselves.

No X-Ray, Transfusion When She Graduated

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

When Mrs. May Stewart was a nurse in the operating rooms of the old St. Joseph's Hospital, there were no such things as x-ray pictures and blood transfusions.

That was back around 1910, just after Mrs. Stewart graduated from the St. Joseph's School of Nursing. As the oldest living graduate, she will be on hand next weekend when the school celebrates its 75th anniversary.

The three-day celebration — June 5 to 7 — is pulling close to 650 graduates back to mark the occasion, Mrs. Maria Kissinger, one of the organizers, said Friday.

There will be teas, including one at Government House, and tours and an artifacts display and a lot of reminiscing which begins with "remember when . . ."

Mrs. Stewart, now 87, remembers when she was taking her training, the hospital, now known as Victoria General, was building the portion known as X wing, a grey stone section with its broad entrance steps onto Humboldt Street.

The hospital was founded and operated for many years by the Sisters of St. Ann and Mrs. Stewart remembers kindly her instructors, including the late Sister Mary Peter, known as "the old warrior."

MRS. STEWART
. . . remembers when

The school's former graduates are coming from right across Canada, from the U.S., Australia and possibly Norway. Many will be staying with graduates living locally or old friends.

A welcoming tea Thursday at the nursing school will be opened by Sister Mary Armella, a sister of Sister Mary Gertrude, founder of the school.

Memorabilia, including old uniforms and treasured photos, will be on display and there will be a wine and cheese party after the annual meeting Thursday night.

A tour Friday morning will include the provincial museum, Helmcken House, home of the pioneer doctor and the historic school house built over a century ago by the Sisters of St. Ann.

Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen and Mrs. Owen will welcome graduates at a tea Friday afternoon.

On Saturday there will be tours of the hospital and nursing school and a banquet at The Empress in the evening.

Message for a Cameraman

BURNABY — Roaming television cameraman undoubtedly will show high school athletes greater respect, especially if Scott Neilson of New Westminster is in the field.

The cameraman took up a position about 200 feet away from the takeoff point when Neilson took up his position for the hammer throw at the British Columbia high school track and field championships Friday.

Thereafter, the cameraman picked his spots with greater care.

The hammer record was one of two broken by Neilson as New Westminster bounced into the team lead with 21 points. Mt. Douglas of Victoria and Kitsilano of Vancouver shared second with 16 points after Friday's events.

Neilson's hammer toss of 230 feet, 7½ inches broke the North American standard of 229-2½ he set two weeks ago.

Ian Sutherland of Victoria, the only St. Michael's University School competitor here, was second at 165 while Don Staller of Kitsilano was third with a 153-5 toss.

The six-foot-five, 236-pound Neilson then moved into the shot-put circle and he won the event with a meet-record throw of 59 feet, 9½ inches. Staller was second at 49-4.

Brent Fougner of Mt. Doug was the only Victorian to win an opening-day event. Fougner, who missed the Vancouver Island championships because of a twisted ankle, won the triple jump with a leap of 13.84 metres.

Jon Smith of Oak Bay and Louise Herlinveaux of Parkland came up with second-place performances for the Greater Victoria contingent.

Smith was runnerup to John Martens in the 3,000 metres final as the Burnaby runner flashed to a Canadian scholastic record with a time of eight minutes, 21.2 seconds.

In other finals Friday, Kathy Dong of Vancouver won the girls' high jump and Alison Hayward of West Vancouver took the javelin with a Canadian scholastic record-throw of 161-5.

Mt. Douglas topped all schools in qualifying events with 14 making it to the finals.

NORM BAKER
. . . 11-point night

Kevin and Norm Notch 15 Goals

NEW WESTMINSTER — Victoria McDonalds play one game at a time but Kevin Alexander keeps Western Canada Major Junior "A" Lacrosse League observers looking at season-long projections.

Victoria's sensational scorer kept the emphasis on his torrid point pace with another great performance Friday as the Bakers overpowered New Westminster Salmonbellies 20-12.

He now has 57 points. If Alexander can continue his torrid pace, he may well become the first player to top the 200-point mark in one season.

He scored 159 points last season to establish the record for the junior league.

Despite Alexander's output, he had to share the honors with teammates Norm Baker and Bob Cool.

Baker collected six goals and five assists to boost his point count to 44. Cool failed to score but picked up six assists.

New Westminster goalie Jim Poelzer, who came into the game at the start of the third period after Bakers took a 12-4 lead, put more steam into the home team's attack than did some of the forwards.

Poelzer, rushing up floor to take part in power-play situations, scored one goal and managed two assists. However Baker and Alexander both scored open-net goals when Poelzer lost possession.

Despite Victoria's domination, McDonald goalie Al Radley came up with an outstanding performance. He was called upon to make 51 stops, and was far more effective than either of the two New Westminster netminders.

STARS' VOICES HEARD; OPEN EVENTS ARE BACK

There is a shortage of meets for top-calibre track and field athletes, so officials of this year's Y-Times meet June 21 and 22 are confident they'll have an excellent field for their open events.

The Y-Times, once an open competition, has been primarily age-class the past few seasons but has been expanded to include both open and age-class competition this year at Centennial Stadium.

As meet co-director Jack Rowe explained, "Top calibre athletes have a difficult time finding meets to enter, so we know we'll have some fine track and field people here for the meet."

Included in the open events are men's and women's high jump, long jump, javelin, shot put, 100, 400, 800 and 1,500 metres and 110-metre and 400-metre hurdles.

Entries are already coming in for age-class competition and meet officials have decided to upgrade the qualifying standards. Even so, more than 800 entries are expected from B.C., Alberta, Washington and Oregon.

Competition among high school athletes from the Island, the B.C. mainland and the U.S. is another feature of the meet. Among those expected to take part are Mt. Douglas middle-distance star Tom Griffin.

Rocks Drop to Third

VANCOUVER — It's been a week of inconsistency for Victoria Shamrocks.

The disappointing aspects of their fluctuating fortunes have cost the Rocks second place in the Western Lacrosse Association standings.

It started when previously-winless Coquitlam Adanacs ended Victoria's three-game undefeated streak with an 11-7 decision Monday.

Things looked better Wednesday when the Archie Browning-coached Shamrocks romped to a 17-7 victory over league-leading New Westminster Salmonbellies.

Gloom returned Friday. Stung by four successive Vancouver goals late in the second period, the Shamrocks bowed 15-7 to the Burrards.

The Irish, trailing 3-2 after the first period, were down by one (4-3) when the four-straight splurge put Vancouver in command of Friday's game.

Alternating goalies Don Hamilton and Pat Safaniuk played a prominent role in the win that pushed Burrards into sole possession of second place. Making key saves in the early going, they combined to turn aside 29 of the 36 Victoria shots.

Most of the game's excitement came in the final period. It produced half of the game's goals and a lengthy brawl before the final whistle.

Bill Mercer scored three goals to lead Vancouver's attack while Ray Durrante, playing his second game of the season, added two.

Shamrocks missed the services of their top scorer, Ron MacNeil, and his brother, Milt. Both were unable to make the trip to Vancouver.

Racing Teams Don't Come Cheap at 'Indy'

Cleaning out the bottom drawer before a few days upcoast and maybe down river; or what do you do for an encore when No. 1 son goes fishing, produces a 14-pounder, among others; then one week later walks in and comments: "they don't make sinks very big, do they?" and drops in a 24 pounder? Oh well, or perhaps you've heard of that famous lake up-country where there's a new method of catching trout that is positively foolproof. And all that is needed in the way of tackle is a poir of ice skates, an axe and a net.

It seems that the fish are so plentiful, and inquisitive, that it's a snap to fill the creel and even pick the size. The trick is this. You don your skates, saunter out on the ice and look below. Soon a fish will appear. When it does, you start skating. The fish, naturally, follows. And once you have the fish tired out, you simply cut a hole in the ice with the axe, dip the net under the unsuspecting finny one, and start over again.

Meanwhile, down at Indy where they ran the famed '500' on Sunday, it wasn't the prize money that most racing teams were concerned with; it was the cost. And the average outlay of putting a car in that event adds up to the staggering figure of $314,000. Briefly, the breakdown looks like this. Four engines at $27,500 each, $110,000; two chassis, $90,000; spare parts, $25,000; car transporter, $25,000; pickup truck for crew, tools, $5,500; fireproof uniforms, nine men, $3,600; entry fee $1,240; retainer for driver, $40,000; salaries for five mechanics, $6,500; living expenses, mechanics, 30 days, $4,500; rental cars, month, $1,200; truck operation, maintenance, $1,000; living expenses, four pit men, $600. This doesn't include racing tires, which a racing team may get free from a tire company, or other sophisticated equipment such as computer systems.

The benefits? Well, most racing teams don't benefit too much from the effort. According to a Washington Post survey, one of the top racing teams showed a meagre profit of $6,867.61 for fiscal '73, and a loss in '74. Which is a good reason why sponsors are so important and eagerly sought after.

Meanwhile, if hockey is supposedly over for this season, it is only until the next mail. And if anyone is interested in playing hockey this fall and continuing an education, the Southwest Hockey League claims to be ideal in this regard. For besides providing college tuition, books, room and board, plus a supplementary allowance to all players while they are playing hockey, the subsidy will continue until the end of the school term. On the other hand each player will be required to maintain passing grades in the educational institution in order to continue in the hockey program. Age limit is between 18 and 23, and further details are available by writing the Southwest Hockey League, P.O. Box 14745, Las Vegas, Nevada.

And also, it is estimated that at least 200 professional hockey players will be out of work on June 1, because of cutbacks by major league teams and the new NHL policy of consolidating farm systems and scouting reports. And just what will happen to the myriad of scouts that travel the country is another good question. The fat is being trimmed off, it's that basic.

Congratulations, too, are in order for Reggie Clarkson, inducted into B.C.'s Sports Hall of Fame on Tuesday. The honor was long overdue. If he wasn't that big, physically, as athletes are supposed to be, he certainly never lacked confidence or ability in whatever endeavour he undertook. There was one year he tried two major sports, both at the same time, or nearly so. When he was a member of the Vancouver Capilanos of the Western International League, he tried his hand at lacrosse, as a goalie, when the pros were rained out. But Capilano manager Bob Brown soon put an end to those shenanigans and Clarkson went on to hit .333 that summer, his first as a pro.

He moved up in the Dodgers' chain after that but a sore arm ended his baseball career. Otherwise, he played pro football with Calgary and Edmonton, pro basketball with the Vancouver Hornets, was good enough to play soccer for Victoria United and then, when he finally turned to golf, he made it to the final of the Vancouver Island Open match-play final against professional Bill Wakeham. And if anyone wonders about his football talent, he was once traded for Normie Kwong. Normie who? If he had one ambition remaining before he moved from Victoria to Vancouver, it was to play golf on the B.C. Willingdon Cup team. The odds may be against it but that has never bothered Reggie before. So why should it now, at age 50, which he will be in August.

'The Players Will Decide'

OTTAWA (CP) — Relief may be on the way for bored hockey fans who remember the exciting play of two Soviet Union-Canada matches.

There may also be a partial answer to the endless arguments over which country is first in hockey.

Plans for an international hockey tournament bring teams from the Soviet Union, Czechoslovaka, Sweden, Finland and the United States to play the best available Canadians in 1976 were announced Friday by Health Minister Marc Lalonde.

The hitch is getting approval from National Hockey League team owners and the competing countries, he told a news conference.

Alan Eagleson, the NHL Players' Association chief, will head the Canadian organizing committee charged with arranging details with the other countries.

He said the NHL moguls will oppose the tournament and "it will be up to us to persuade them that it makes sense." World Hockey Association owners support the series, he added.

The two series with the Soviet Union were played in the fall, a frequently-criticized move, because the Soviet players were in mid-season form, while the Canadians were just beginning to train. Canada, using NHL players, won in 1972 while the Soviets outgunned the WHA's best last fall.

Lalonde said the tournament would be held in the fall prior to the start of the 1976-77 professional season. It would be a round-robin affair with the top two squads meeting in a best-of-three championship.

Eagleson said he would go to the NHL and the WHA to get "the best possible refereeing." Officiating was controversial in both of the Canada-Soviet series.

Concern about NHL owners' opposition dominated Eagleson's comments. The owners had opposed the 1972 series "and we saw what happened."

"The players will make the determination, not the owners."

If the public wanted to see the tournament, the owners would become responsive. He could not imagine an owner going to the courts to prevent a player from suiting up for Canada or the U.S.

"Clarence Campbell NHL president will announce tomorrow that this series will never take place," Eagleson said.

Campbell said in Montreal late Friday that he could not imagine NHL players participating if their teams did not expand their injury insurance.

"Why should our clubs provide this insurance," Campbell said.

"Unless the league changes its policy . . ." the tournament will never take place, he said. It is unlikely Canadian public opinion will sway American owners into letting their players take part.

Eagleson said a U.S. team could be formed around the 40 American-born players in the professional leagues. But Canada would fight attempts by U.S. owners to convince their Canadians to change citizenship.

JAPAN IN ELITE GROUP AS SWEDES WITHDRAW

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese Ice Hockey Federation decided Friday to take part in the Winter Olympics in Innsbruck, Austria, Feb. 4-15, 1976.

Officials said the decision was made after Japan was unexpectedly offered the chance of participating by the International Ice Hockey Federation.

Japan became eligible to participate because East Germany, first in Group B, advanced to Group A after Sweden, third in Group A, withdrew. Sweden said it could not send its team to the Olympics because of scheduled local matches.

Quebec Bid Fails

SAN FRANCISCO (CP) — Canada's bid to be host to the world Nordic skiing championships in 1978 was defeated Friday by a narrow margin at a meeting of the International Ski Federation (FIS).

The federation instead voted 39 to 36 to hold the championships in Finland. Quebec City would have been the site of the championships had the Canadian bid been successful.

Canada was represented at the meeting by the Canadian Ski Association as well as delegates from Quebec City and Mount Ste. Anne. Dr. Peter Andrews of Vancouver, president of the CSA, was chairman of the Canadian delegation.

The meeting also gave the 1978 world ski championships to Garmisch - Partenkirchen, West Germany.

Sonics Are Happy

SEATTLE (UPI) — Coach Bill Russell of Seattle Supersonics says that "we got what we really wanted" in selecting Seattle University guard Frank Oleynick in the first round of the National Basketball Association draft.

"We took him No. 1 because that's the way we felt about him," Russell said.

The Sonics drafted 12th and had indicated in advance they were after both a sharp-shooting guard and a good forward.

Seattle also had indicated the team needed a big guard, one taller than the 6-foot-2 Oleynick, but the Sonics' order in the picking didn't allow much manoeuvering room to select on basis of height.

HOT FINISH CARRIES THOMPSON TO TITLE

Now that he's sporting the British Columbia seniors championship, the 60-year-old Victoria Golf Club member may be feeling better about his game.

Thompson dropped a "testy" two-foot birdie putt on the 18th green at Point Grey Friday to finish the day with a par-matching 72 and a 54-hole total of 221 to beat out former champion Hank Mitchell of Langara.

Mitchell, who started the day with a two-stroke lead and ran it to four at one point, finished with a 75 and a 222 total.

Gord Verley, a clubmate of Thompson's, finished third with 74-79-76—229. Colwood's Gord Millin, the southpaw-swinging president of the Victoria District Golf Committee, took fourth, 75-83-73—231. Vancouver's Bill McGhee was another stroke off the pace while Dr. George Bigelow of Victoria was sixth with 77-81-75—233. Vic Painter of Colwood, 81-78-77—236, finished eighth.

Mitchell, the 1971 champ, had a four-stroke advantage over Thompson with four holes to play.

Unfortunately, the B.C. champion will not compete in the Canadian seniors tournament at Calgary next month. The field was filled — on a first-come, first-served basis — when Thompson's application was received.

He Didn't Need Good Eyes To Know It Was an Eagle

ATLANTA (AP) — Nearsighted Miller Barber didn't have to see it. He knew he had an eagle from the crowd reaction.

"You know, there's a par clap, there's a birdie clap and there's an eagle clap," Barber said. "I knew that was an eagle clap."

Barber's eagle on the 358-yard, par-four 14th started a late surge Friday that saw him move into a share of the Atlanta golf tournament lead with U.S. Open champion Hale Irwin at nine-under-par 135 for 36 holes.

"I just don't do that," said the balding 44-year-old veteran who would become golf's ninth million-dollar winner with a victory in this $225,000 tournament that is a mandatory stop for the tour's top players.

"I don't remember when I last had an eagle," said Barber, who holed a pitching wedge from 115 yards away, then closed with birdies on the final two holes to fashion an eight-under-par 64, tying the course record.

Irwin, lodged in a three-way deadlock after the first round, retained his share of the lead by shooting a 69 Friday, despite some difficulty with his driver.

Larry Hinson turned in a 67 in the breezy, humid conditions to trail the leaders by two shots at 137. Then came Jim Dent alone in fourth place at 138 after firing a 68.

Four were grouped at 139, including Johnny Miller, winner of three events in the West earlier this year. Miller eagled the par-five finishing hole for a 71.

Others at 139 were Billy Casper, who shared the opening-day lead, Jerry Heard and Charles Coody. Heard and Coody had 68s and Casper a 73.

Jack Nicklaus, who won the last two events on this course, soared to a 73 and was among a group at 141.

Among those failing to survive the halfway cut of 145 were Arnold Palmer, who had a 75 for a 154 total, George Knudson of Toronto, who had a 71 for a 147 total, and Ben Kern of Toronto, whose 76 gave him a 150 total.

Needs Ready to Sue NHL

TORONTO (CP) — Greg Needs is prepared to take the National Hockey League to court if it doesn't allow him an opportunity to pursue his career in the professional league.

One door was opened to the 20-year-old graduating junior when Minnesota Fighting Saints selected him in the World Hockey Association draft.

But NHL president Clarence Campbell is adamant. Existing laws will not allow Needs to play in the NHL with only one eye.

Last year, with a protective covering for his good eye, he scored 30 goals and added 30 assists while playing 60 games with Calgary Centennials of the tough Western Canada Hockey League.

"There's a principle involved here," said his father, Norman. "If a player is eligible by ability, then the NHL rule shouldn't discriminate against the player. . . .

"The NHL's own computer rated Greg among the top 12 (11th over-all) graduating juniors. So why discriminate if one is handicapped? There are laws against that, aren't there?"

Two dates are important in this matter — June 3, the date of the junior draft; and June 16, when Campbell has agreed to allow the Needs to present a comprehensive brief to the NHL rules committee on why the rule should be changed.

Campbell said Thursday night Needs is eligible for the draft, "but it wouldn't do any good because he cannot pass the league's physical examinations — the vision test."

Hall-of-Famer Leading by Four

BALTIMORE (AP) — Veteran Kathy Whitworth shot her second consecutive three-under-par 70 and took a four-stroke lead Friday after two rounds of the Ladies' Professional Golf Association championship.

Miss Whitworth, who has scored 72 tour victories and just last Monday was inducted into the LPGA Hall of Fame, collected four birdies and recorded her only bogey when play resumed following a one-hour rain delay.

Debbie Austin, the first-round co-leader at 68, soared to a 76 on her second trip around the Pine Ridge course, but managed to tie for second place with Donna Caponi Young and Sandra Haynie at 144.

In a three-way tie for fifth place at 145 were Sandra Palmer, Pam Higgins and Penny Pulz of Australia.

Third Spot Is Just Dandy For Royal Oak's Handyman

Pete Isaacson doesn't mind batting third in the order.

A utility player who will fill in at any position for Royal Oak, Isaacson started at second base Friday and, for a change, batted in the third position. It worked out well.

Isaacson went three-for-three at the plate, drove in a run and scored two — including the winner — as Royal Oak edged Mike's Sports Shop 4-2 in Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League action Friday at Central Park.

It was Royal Oak's third straight win.

'Trouble Guy' for Bates Stays with Towers Squad

That would make it good news for New Westminster Royal Towers, and less appealing to Victoria Bates.

Morneau pitches for Westminster, and that means he'll see his share of duty when the Pacific Coast Men's Fastball League teams square off in a four-game series at Royal Athletic Park this weekend.

Teams meet in a doubleheader tonight, starting at 7 and 9 p.m., and again Sunday at 1 and 3.

Morneau, who had been considering a softball offer from Prince George, is "among the people giving us trouble," the way Bates' manager Joe Patterson put it. He has accounted for two of the six losses suffered by Bates in league play, both within the past week.

Each time, Morneau checked the hard-hitting Bates on four hits. In his first look at Bates, he allowed only five hits but lost a 2-0 decision to Dave Ruthowsky.

North Vancouver's Andy Konopacki, John Dreidiger of New Westminster and Vancouver's Merle Johnson and Clem Perini are the only other pitchers to record decisions over Victoria.

Morneau, by defeating Victoria last Wednesday, joined Bates' Stan Kern and Dave Ruthowsky as the league's top winners. All three have won four games.

League statistics released Friday show Victoria's Harvey Stevenson as the top batter with a .375 average. Stevenson leads in runs-batted-in (with 10), homers (2) and shares the lead in most hits (12) with clubmate Bob Holness.

Imposter's Act Shows Why Padres Remain Last

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP) — The story Rocky Perone has to tell may make one think there's a reason San Diego Padres have finished last in the National League each year of their existence.

At 35, Perone donned a hairpiece, passed himself off as a 21-year-old rookie shortstop and was signed by the Padres. The perennial major league cellerdwellers assigned Perone to a minor league team and he actually played in a game before being cut.

"Yeah, it's true," admits Mike Port, San Diego's minor league administrator. "We signed him."

Perone, a construction worker, isn't just an ordinary guy, however. He's a self-proclaimed baseball vagabond who's played minor league or semi-pro baseball every year since he left Lisbon Falls, Me., in 1957.

He had always wanted to play in the majors but said: "I was five-feet-eight and 165 pounds. Scouts don't like my size."

Last year, Perone set out to make the big time despite overwhelming odds.

"I did it to prove a point—that baseball scouts don't know much about baseball prospects."

He was living here, but conceded: "I didn't think I could pull it off in southern California because too many scouts knew me.

"So I went to Florida. I started playing in a park league in St. Petersburg and Jim Marshall, the Padres' Florida scout, liked me. He told me he wanted to watch me work out at Florida Southern University. So I did.

"My hair was short so I wore a youthful-looking hairpiece. I told them I was 21. The coach at Florida Southern hit me some grounders and I hit a little bit. He wanted to offer me a scholarship.

"Well, Marshall called me and said he wanted to sign me. So I did.

"I kept getting calls from the Padres. They wanted to watch me work out before one of their games before I was supposed to report to Walla Walla, Wash. I was kind of worried about that because I know a lot of people in baseball who might recognize me.

"But I pulled that off too. I fielded about 60 grounders before a Padre game, went in the locker room, changed my clothes and went home. They still thought I was 21."

When he reported on June 19, 1974, to Walla Walla, a team in the Class A Northwest League, he learned that even at the make-believe age of 21 he would be the oldest guy on the Padre farm team.

"Well, I nearly died during spring training. The wind sprints were awful. But I stuck it out. I was determined to get into a game, to have it on record.

"Our third game was at Lewiston, Idaho. (Manager Cliff) Ditto said, 'Perone, you're starting today.' I got a hit and stole a base.

"I thought the jig might be up at Lewiston because their manager, Bobby Hoffman, was my manager at Daytona Beach 13 years ago. I stayed away from him before the game.

"After the game, he came up to me and said, 'Don't I know you from somewhere?'

"'No sir,' I said.

"'How old are you—you gotta be 25,' he said.

"Two days later Ditto calls me into his office and told me they had to let me go because they were bringing in a high draft choice. So I packed up and left."

McCovey Equals a Record

By The Canadian Press

Young Bob Apodaca was facing old Willie McCovey for the first time Friday night. Veteran catcher Jerry Grote suggested a breaking pitch. Apodaca opted for a fastball.

"I wanted to get it down and away," he explained.

McCovey hit a grand-slam home run off Apodaca—the 16th of his career to tie Hank Aaron's National League record— to cap San Diego's six-run rally in the eighth inning that carried the Padres to their 6-2 victory over New York Mets.

In Friday's other National League results, Pittsburgh Pirates edged Atlanta Braves 2-1, Houston Astros blanked Philadelphia Phillies 5-0 and St. Louis Cardinals nipped Cincinnati Reds 5-4.

Los Angeles Dodgers were leading Chicago Cubs 3-1 when play was halted by darkness in the eighth inning —to be resumed before today's regularly scheduled game.

"I was looking for an off-speed pitch, not a fastball," McCovey admitted after he parked his fifth homer of the year far beyond the right field wall. "He shook off Grote and that got me confused."

"Two previous times, I've been up with the bases loaded and I was thinking 'home run' because I was the tying run. Tonight I wasn't thinking that way because all we needed was a fly ball for one run. Maybe that's the key—not thinking about it."

Loser Jerry Koosman had a five-hit shutout going before John Grubb, Enzo Hernandez and Bobby Tolan singled for one run and Dave Winfield doubled to tie it in the eighth.

The Dodgers broke a 1-1 tie in the fifth on Dave Lopes' homer and added a run in the sixth on a double by Steve Garvey and a single by Ivan de Jesus.

In the American League, Roy Howell drove in five runs as Texas Rangers slipped by New York Yankees 6-5; Minnesota Twins beat Boston Red Sox 4-3; Baltimore Orioles blanked California Angels 5-0, and Oakland Athletics defeated Cleveland Indians 6-2.

Two games — Chicago at Detroit and Kansas City at Milwaukee — were postponed because of rain.

If it doesn't fit, it's the wrong color, or you get two of them as gifts—What do you do? Drive all over creation for a refund or an exchange?

Not if you've shopped right here in Victoria.

Here, you are doing business with retailers who depend on you as a customer and are eager for repeat business from you.

The total value of any new purchase is measured in more than just the listed price.

You must also be sure that should you need further information or should you have some problem, that the salesman or businessman is available for fast action—whether for warranty work or even a friendly refund.

And the most convenient thing about shopping at home is that you can check out information on products in the comfort of your own home — Through the pages of your two Victoria Daily Newspapers.

The advertisements, inserted by businesses, large and small, keep you informed of the latest market prices, the opening of new stores, special offers, credit terms, hours of operation, parking facilities etcetera.

The progressive Victoria retailers who advertise their goods and services in your daily newspaper not only offer competitive prices and good selection but also back up their sales with on-the-spot availability should you need more information, parts or servicing, or— dare we say it, should you have any complaints to make.

'Too Bad. They Are Ruining This Inlet. Man's Crazy'

By HUMPHREY DAVY
Times Staff

The waters of Rupert Inlet reflected a golden hue as the sun hung above the distant hills before sinking out of sight.

A flock of ducks rose from marshy grasslands while a lone crane winged its way to its rookery on the distance shore.

"Too bad," he said. "They are ruining this inlet. Soon there will be no more fish, no more clams, no more birds. Man is crazy."

The man, like many Vancouver Islanders, was expressing concern for the future of Rupert Inlet which they feel is threatened with pollution from mine tailings discharged by Utah Mines, a multi-national corporation with headquarters in California.

The seven-mile inlet about 30 miles west of Port McNeil is one of four spectacular inlets which cut deep into the centre of northern V.I. The others are Neroutsos Arm, Holberg Inlet and Quatsino Sound.

They are rich in clams, crabs and bottom fish. Thousands of salmon spawn in creeks which empty into the inlets. They support millions of migratory birds in spring and fall.

All the inlets have environmental problems but the most serious involves Rupert Inlet which some experts claim will die a slow death unless action is taken to minimize the pollution caused by mine tailings.

A blanket of fine grey silt, the effluent from the mine, is slowly spreading in the inlet and there have been reports of huge clouds of tailings flowing down the adjoining 20-mile long Quatsino Sound.

Today there is no evidence of damage to shell fish or crabs, but dead salmon have been seen in growing numbers.

To understand the problem one must take a look at the mine operations. It is big, the biggest of its kind on the island.

Mining crews gouge from the landscape an average of 200,000 tons of mineral ore a day. Some ore trucks carry as much as 135 tons.

But not all the material is used in processing and much is discarded as waste and dumped along the shore, creating a new shoreline.

The B.C. Pollution Control Branch says about 33,000 tons of mineral ore a day goes through the milling process and the waste (tailings) is discharged into the inlet which is about 600 feet deep.

Utah has an application before the branch to increase the milling process to 40,000 tons a day.

The trouble started when the turbidity of the water (suspended material) started to rise in Quatsino Narrows, a passage connecting the inlet with Quatsino Sound. Strong tidal currents carry the silt in various directions.

For the Quatsino Band the situation was so serious that Chief Frank Wallas last month threatened Utah with legal action unless the tailings disposal was stopped.

"We are not claiming compensation only for ourselves but for everyone who makes his living from the sea," he said.

He recalled the CPR paid compensation to U.S. farmers for damage caused to crops from poisonous smelter fumes at Trail.

"We say the company should not be allowed to destroy a food resource to benefit another," he said. "Like farmers we have a crop — only it is from the sea. This is our livelihood."

Wallas said before the mine was opened the Narrows waters was clear.

"I know, I worked in a tug boat before the mine was opened," he said. "Now the water is silted. I have seen dead fish floating by. The silt gets in their gills and they die."

The company, which conducts in the inlet one of the most extensive monitoring programs in North America, denies there is any evidence of damage.

But Patrick Moore, of Port Hardy a biologist conducting a study of the waters, disputes the findings.

From the start, Moore has watched the effects of the mining operation. When the Social Credit government allowed Utah to mine in 1970, he warned of the probable spreading of tailings in the inlet due to strong deep water tidal currents.

He claims after four years study he has proved the tailings have been scattered throughout the entire inlet from the surface to a depth of 639 feet.

The evidence was presented in his doctoral thesis which was accepted for publication in June of 1974, he says.

He said it was accepted by all the professors on his research committee with the exception of one man who had the year before been hired as one of Utah's "independent consultants."

A PCB official said the branch is aware of the increased turbidity in Quatsino Narrows and its effect on the inlet.

"We are presently cooperating with the federal environmental department in a study of tidal currents," he said.

"While there is no question that the turbidity of the water is rising, we have received no evidence of damage to sea life," he added. "We have heard of reports of damage, but no one has come to us with concrete proof."

He noted that PCB can not act until proof of damage is submitted.

"This is what we would like to get," he said.

Whether or not extensive damage is occurring to sea life, most observers agree that conditions in Rupert Inlet won't improve with time. There is still billions of tons of ore to be mined at Rupert Inlet and millions of gallons of tailing to be discharged.

What of the long-range effects of silt on Quatsino Sound and its beaches? No one knows.

But at Port McNeill some are indifferent to what happens in Rupert Inlet.

One woman shopkeeper commented:

"I think it is foolish for Indians to claim compensation," she said. "Who do they think they are?"

She made her living selling goods to Indians and miners.

Would she say the same thing if she made her living from the sea?

DEBTS, TAXES PLAGUE LONDON

LONDON (AP) — London, like New York, is in deep financial trouble.

There is even talk of bankruptcy but most authorties are confident it won't happen here.

Among London's woes:

—London's debt was $4.6 billion at the end of March and it may be difficult to borrow more. An attempt in April to float a $162-million bond issue failed when underwriters could not place 90 per cent of the bonds. New York City's debt has risen from $500 million in 1965 to $6 billion now.

—Property taxes have risen 50 per cent and bus and subway fares 80 per cent or more in the last year here, but the added revenue has not helped. The tax on an average three-bedroom house has risen from $322 to $414. A short ride on the bus or subway has gone up from 11½ cents to 23 cents.

—Much of London's long-term debt was borrowed when interest rates were at three or four per cent. As the loans mature, the money to repay them must be borrowed at 12 or 13 per cent. The national government will not lend money to London unless the city pays still higher interest rates. New York has been borrowing at a rate of 9.5 per cent and President Ford has turned down New York's plea for help.

—London's city employees want a wage increase of 30 per cent to keep ahead of inflation.

Marriage: More Than Love

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

Love and marriage, as the popular song of a few years ago assured us, go together like a horse and carriage. But is romantic love strong enough in the shanks to pull the awkward and creaky wagon of marriage through the years?

I would not downgrade the role of romantic love in marriage, but I would suggest that the synchronized thumping of the hearts of a young man and a young woman does not in itself guarantee that they will make a good marriage.

Love changes in marriage: it develops and deepens in that special relationship which is pointed to in the biblical assertion, "A man leaves his father and his mother and cleaves to his wife, and they become one flesh." But let us not misunderstand what the Bible means by one-fleshness. In biblical usage the word "flesh" does not designate simply the physical body and its functions: it designates the totality of personhood — to use currently fashionable language, the psychosomatic unity of the person. The statement, "they become one flesh", does not pertain merely to sexual union between a man and his wife — although the sexual is within its scope. The sexual, of course, is basic in marriage, but it is not the be-all-and-end-all.

"They shall become one flesh": that declares simply that in marriage a man and a woman ought so to respond to and sustain one another's personhood that a uniquely valuable relationship is developed. A marriage, of course, begins with some degree of compatibility, but the real compatibility of marriage is a developing process. The intensity of the emotion and passion which take a couple into marriage does not guarantee that their marriage will be a good one: it merely provides the initial force.

Compatibility in marriage is made up of all kinds of little considerations and compromises and courtesies, a sharing of jokes and laughs and of sorrows and tears. It is motivated not by self-regard but by unselfish concern. Dr. Alfred Adler, one of the pioneers of modern psychiatry, said this about marriage: "Each partner must be more interested in the other than in himself or herself. This is the only basis on which love and marriage can be successful." (We can take warning from the cartoon which shows a woman saying to her husband, "I took one of those compatibility tests in a magazine today, and you flunked!"

A good marriage is made by a man and a woman who, motivated and directed by outgoing love for one another, determine to sustain it by such respect and trust and concern for one another that it cannot be shattered by the buffettings and menaces and challenges which come to every marriage. More important to marriage than the voltage of the love are the directions in which the current flows.

Dietrich Bonhoeffer, the young German theologian who was hanged by the Gestapo in 1945 for his active opposition to Naziism, while in prison shortly before his death wrote a wedding sermon for a young couple he knew. In that sermon he said this: "It is not your love which sustains the marriage, but from now on the marriage that sustains your love." That points the way to compatibility in marriage.

Divorce, Marriage Rising

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada is in the middle of a marriage boom, with one of the highest marriage rates in the Western world, says John F. Peters, a sociology professor at Wilfrid Laurier University in Waterloo, Ont., who has made a study of marriage patterns. In 1973 there were nine weddings for every 1,000 persons in the population.

This is lower than the all-time high of 10.9 in 1942 and 1946, but higher than the average of seven per 1,000 recorded between 1921 and 1935.

However, marriages today are different from those of the past. Dr. Peters said the social pressure to wed is less today and the number of couples living together without marrying is increasing and becoming socially acceptable.

"Possibly marriage will be entered into more realistically, with the result that fewer will break down in the future."

The rate of marriage breakdown is rising. Before 1968, the divorce rate was never more than 54.8 per 100,000 population, but only one year later the figure nearly doubled. By 1973, the Canadian divorce rate was up to 166.1.

Dr. Peters said marriage today is under strains seldom experienced before. Couples are moving more and losing the emotional support of their families. Women's liberation had influenced women, who are rejecting many traditional roles.

Lack of success in one marriage does not stop people from trying again, though, said Dr. Peters.

ACTIVE ARCHBISHOP Archbishop Joseph MacNeil of Edmonton is equally at home talking about baseball or the need for church activism. Archbishop MacNeil, who often travels to schools to meet students and teachers and celebrate mass, says people simply think bishops are tied behind a desk all the time but he finds time for leisure activities, such as snowshoeing.

Computer Steers the Driver

By GEORGE VINE

HILDESHEIM, West Germany (Reuter) — A Computer pathfinder that automatically navigates automobiles by the best available route is in advanced stage of development in West Germany.

The guide is named ALI—Short for "Autofahrer Lenkunk und Informations-system."

Unlike the genie which popped out of the bottle in the Arabian Nights fantasy, the German ALI lies coiled up in a small black box beside the steering column. And he does not obey, he commands.

A succession of arrows on the illuminated panel of the black box tells the man at the wheel which road to drive along and where to turn off. ALI picks up his instructions while on the move by putting out a feeler and touching an induction strip embedded in the surface of the road.

ALI is the brainchild of the Blaupunkt radio works here, a subsidiary of the Bosch electronics concern which has been associated with motoring since the days of the first horseless carriage.

Upon departuren ALI informs the computer of starting point and destination. The computer works out the best route in the light of prevailing driving conditions and sputters out its instructions by radio.

The induction strips which convey ALI's instructions are embedded in the road in front of each junction or fork and each exit from the expressway.

As the car rolls over the strips, ALI checks in with his code sign and receives individual instructions and information for the next stage of the journey. There is no need to slow down. The signals are exchanged within a quarter of a second.

To avoid congested roads lying miles ahead and invisible to the driver, the computer may direct the car to another route or order a lower speed. Symbols light up showing what kind of weather the car is running into. A red arrow tells the driver whether to take the next turn right or left or to keep straight on.

On the test stretch laid out by Blaupunkt engineers, you can drive from city A to city B without having seen the area before. Specialists in data techniques from the Technical University, Aachen, are working out the costs and the best way of installing a driving information netork across the country.

The scientists have proven that the system will work. Its advocates say that as the numbers of cars increases it will be as indispensable on the roads of the future as similar navigation aids are in today's crowded airlanes.

They estimate that installing several million ALIs as permanent co-pilots in all new cars would lower the cost to no more than that of an ordinary car radio.

Witnesses Welcome New Ministers

Fourteen new ministers were welcomed in ceremonies last Sunday as the Jehovah's Witnesses held a two-day assembly at the Victoria Curling Rink on Quadra.

The assembly was attended by 1,434.

Roy Strand of Toronto addressed the delegates on the topic Stand Still and See the Salvation of Jehovah.

"Global problems are apparent, leading some experts to warn that the human race may be killed off," Strand said.

"But the present wicked system will not collapse as a result of its own weighty problems of over-population, famine and war," he said.

"Its end will be at God's own hand in what the Bible speaks of as The Great Tribulation.

"Because it is God's war it is only reasonable to look to Him for preservation," Strand said. "We must imitate His ways and accept His commands."

Kashmir Expedition

The Canadian Office of Academic Liaison, a highly specialized travel organization in Montreal, has arranged an expedition into the virtually unexplored regions of Eastern Kashmir and Ladakh scheduled to depart on August 26, 1975.

The month-long journey is open to the public with specific appeal to those interested in Tibetan Buddhism and culture, remote Himalayan geography, and mountain wilderness travel.

The group will initially fly from New York to Lahore and then drive to Manali in the 13,000-foot-high Kulu Valley. From there, tour guests will continue to the mountain capital of the exiled Dalai Lama, Dharamsala where a possible audience with His Holiness will be arranged. Then on to Jammu and Srinigar eventually heading Northeast through Sonemarg, Kargil and into Western Tibet-Ladakh.

The all-inclusive cost of this unique journey is $2,368, per person, departing from New York. Office of Academic Liaison is at 640 Cathcart Street, Suite 307, Department LT, Montreal.

Institute Cut Off

CAPE TOWN — The South African government Friday declared the Christian Institute of Southern Africa an "affected organization," thereby cutting it off completely from its sources of foreign funds.

The institute's main donors are in the United States, Germany, Holland, Britain, Switzerland, Canada and Scandinavia.

The government's action will force the institute to fall back exclusively on the $72,000 it raises in South Africa of its $300,000 annual budget.

An act passed last year empowers the government to declare any organization "affected" if it deems it to be engaging in "politics" in cooperation with or under the influence of any organization or person outside the country.

It is a crime — punishable by a $14,000 fine or five years imprisonment for a first offence and $28,000 or 10 years for a second offence — for anybody in South Africa to receive foreign money on the institute's behalf as from Friday.

Ordination Of Women Synod Topic

Four clergymen and four lay delegates will represent the local diocese at the eight-day synod meeting of the Anglican Church of Canada, which starts June 12 in Quebec City.

Attending will be Rev. Canon Hilary Butler, Dean Brian Whitlow, Rev. Canon G. B. Baker, Rev. Canon Tom Bailey, Miss Ruth Scott, James McPherrin, Dr. Walter Barss, and Michael Manning.

The controversial question of ordination of women will again be a major issue at the synod meeting on the campus of Laval University.

Delegates will be asked to reaffirm the principle of ordaining women as priests.

They will also be asked to approve a second resolution which will make it possible for a diocesan bishop to proceed to ordain any woman he believes qualified.

Church union will be another major issue.

Anglican bishops have already stated that they consider the plan of union developed with the United and Christian (Disciples of Christ) churches unacceptable and not worthy of further revision.

Rencontre en Christ — Together in Christ is the theme of the synod, which is held every two years and is the highest legislative body in the church.

More than 300 bishops, clergy and laymen and women are expected to attend.

The stay in Quebec City will include a weekend cultural exchange for the mainly English-speaking delegates, who will be billeted with French-speaking Roman Catholic families.

Resolutions on native affairs and northern development will be put before the delegates, and Chief James Wah-Shee of the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories will be a speaker.

Other speakers will be Maurice Cardinal Roy, Roman Catholic primate of Canada and president of the Vatican's justice and peace commission, and Bishop John Allin, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States.

Bishop Gilbert Baker of Hong Kong, who has three ordained women priests in his diocese, will also be present.

SPANIARDS CANONIZED

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope Paul VI made two Spaniards Roman Catholic Saints last Sunday in the first canonization ceremony of the 1975 Holy Year.

Juan Bautista de la Concepcion and Vicenta Maria Lopez y Vicuna were the first of six candidates for sainthood to be canonized during the jubilee. The next will be Mother Elizabeth Anne Seton, who Sept. 14 becomes the first American-born saint.

'Phoney Rituals' Are Betrayal

WOODSTOCK, Ont. (CP) — A United Church of Canada minister said Thursday that the church has "betrayed Christianity by our own pomp and ceremony and by our phoney little rituals."

Dr. George Goth, minister of Metropolitan United Church, London, Ont., told a church fund-raising meeting that "within 100 years there will be another breakaway . . . people aren't going to submit to uniformity."

"The beginning of betrayal was when the church became another one of the great institutions of history concerned with power," said the 68-year-old minister.

He said Roman Emperor Constantine was responsible for turning the church into a machine after deciding his empire should be Christian.

"There was no first Pope, no Rome, no bishops in the early church," he said. "They had none of this nonsense."

Lamenting the lack of morals in pessimistic society, Dr. Goth reminisced about his first years in the ministry.

"The churches were thriving in the depression years. The only thing they didn't have was money. It was much easier to get people to church in those days.

"They didn't have any place else to go. Don't let anyone tell you things were dark and dismal in 1933."

He said some ministers are too lazy to accept the discipline necessary to preach.

"We are witnessing the decline of Western civilization. . . . It has no moral values."

Sisters of St. Ann Honored Sunday

Three sisters of St. Ann with 60 years' service in the order and six with 50 years' service will be honored Sunday in a ceremony at Queenswood House of Studies, 2494 Arbutus.

An 11 a.m. mass will be followed by a dinner and in the afternoon a tree planting ceremony and tea.

Celebrating their diamond jubilee are Sister Mary Lucy, Sister Mary Jean and Sister Mary Thomasina.

There are about 200 sisters of St. Ann in the province.

S. Viet Catholics Divided In Adjustment to Communism

Manchester Guardian

SAIGON — The Catholic church in South Vietnam, long in the forefront of the fight against communism, is now attempting the radical readjustment necessary if it is to survive. But it is split between a left and a right wing already quarreling over two issues, or rather personalities. As soon as communications are restored, Rome will be faced with difficult problems here.

The left-wing Catholic groups have called for the immediate resignations of Monsignor Henri LeMaitre, a Belgian priest who is the apostolic delegate to South Vietnam, and of Monsignor Nguyen Van Thuan, deputy archbishop of Saigon, a nephew of former Premier Ngo Dinh Diem, and a staunch anti-Communist.

These various groups have sent a letter to Pope Paul asking for the removal of these two men if they do not voluntarily resign. One letter direct to the apostolic delegate, couched in Communist-style language, accuses him bluntly of having "dragged the church into a policy of collusion with the American imperialists and their valet Thieu" and of having "furtively tried to impose an anti-Communist bishop on Saigon." By this they mean the appointment earlier this month of Thuan, who has the right of succession should the present archbishop of Saigon, Monsignor Nguyen Van Binh, resign or die. It ends by demanding that LeMaitre resign and leave Vietnam "immediately on receipt of this letter.

One of the leading figures of the Catholic left is Father Huynh Cong Minh, who has a parish in the outskirts of Saigon, and who, it now appears, ran a clandestine group called the "Movement of Catholics for the People." Minh, a serious bearded young man who never wears clerical robes except when giving mass, signals his priesthood only by a small gold cross pinned to his white shirt. The movement emerged from underground existence on the day before the fall of the capital and has since held meetings and produced two magazines which welcome the Communist victory and speak of the need for Catholics to help in the work of building socialism in Vietnam, Minh is not a Communist, or if he is, he is a very good actor. He says, "I shall always be a Catholic. I shall always be tied to the church and to Rome. But our Catholic life here in Vietnam must change. We have been a small privileged and favored minority. Now we must help in the work of building socialism. Our starting point is our Christian ideals and the starting point of the Communists is different. But we can co-exist and work together. They expect religions to wither away so they see no reason for combating us unless we combat them."

The capture of Saigon and South Vietnam was immediately welcomed by many bishops and priests, including some with strong anti-Communist records. The archbishop of Saigon issued a pastoral letter, as did the archbishop of Hue, and the bishop of Da Lat. Others, like the bishop of Kontum, the last French bishop in Indochina, have apparently remained silent. But, generally, the initial response was such as to give the Communists no cause for suspicion.

But the new authorities could be forgiven for dismissing the Catholic welcome as superficial. The whole history of Catholicism in Vietnam is inextricably intermingled first with French colonialism, and then with anti-Communist nationalism.

The officer corps of the old South Vietnamese army was heavily Catholic and Catholics continued to be represented out of all proportion to their actual numbers—about 9 per cent of the total population of South Vietnam — both in the army and in the bureaucracy after Diem. Catholics have not only been prominent in support of the southern regimes including that of Nguyen Van Thieu, who was a Catholic convert, but they have also been prominent in new anti-Communist initiatives.

One such was the Nhan Xa (Revolutionary Social Humanist Party), a descendant of Diem's party, the Can Lao. Thuan was associated with both, particularly the latter, formed in 1966 to create a real alternative to the Communists. In the same line of succession — of anti-Communist Catholic opposition groups — was Father Tran Huu Thanh's Anti-Corruption Movement, which emerged late last year and forced a few reforms on the Thieu government. Thanh is still here, at the church in northern Saigon where he used to hold forth to vast audiences about the stupidity and rottenness of the Thieu regime. "I am still an anti-Communist," he says. "But under the new circumstances the church must pursue a policy of careful co-operation. Then, I think it will be viable."

Thanh considers it foolish to "try to appease" the authorities by demonstrating against Lemaitre and Thuan. "Let matters take their course. The apostolic delegate in Hanoi after 1954 left after one year. A decent interval. Rome does not need to be told its business by a bunch of young priests."

Minh, on the other hand, argues that "this is a very delicate moment for the church in South Vietnam. The new government does not want to get into a quarrel with the church. But if Catholics persist in opposition then naturally something will happen. LeMaitre and Thuan must go."

Whether they do or not, the church in Vietnam obviously faces a difficult period. Minh is right in saying that the majority of bishops and other senior priests are anti-Communist right-wingers. For instance, of Saigon's around 400 priests, perhaps a 100 are known as "rightists", but these include 11 deans and most other church dignitaries. There are in addition numerous ex-army chaplains.

So the immediate question is, as he says, that of the leadership of the church. But in time other questions will arise. One obvious one is that of the church school, since the new government is unlikely to permit the continued existence of an autonomous eductional system teaching a doctrine ultimately opposed to theirs.

Then there is the question of the seminaries and whether they will be allowed to continue recruiting and training priests without interference.

Baptist Numbers Growing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The number of Baptists in North America has increased nearly 83,000 over a year ago to a total of 29,681,927, according to the Baptist World Alliance.

"Most of the growth," the Alliance reports, "is accounted for by the South Baptist Convention, which is the largest Baptist body in the world."

The convention, which also is the United States' largest Protestant arm, now numbers 12.5 million members, an increase of 218,496 from a year ago.

According to the Alliance, seven other Baptist bodies showed membership increases while four reported a decline.

The alliance said the nearly 30 million Baptists were spread among 101,088 churches.

In the United States, the majority of Baptists are grouped into 17 conventions, conferences or fellowships with more than 100,000 members, and numerous smaller bodies.

Canadian statistics show one large Baptist body — the Baptist Federation of Canada, with 132,864 — while Mexican figures show one moderately-sized organization — the Convencion Nacional Bautista de Mexico, with 21,410 members.

The statistics cover Baptist organizations affiliated with the World Alliance as well as those who are not, and count only baptized believers.

Amity Singers Set

The popular Amity Singers will sing this Sunday at St. Dunstan's Anglican Church at the 9 a.m. service.

Rev. W. Lunny, who has been away the past two weeks withe the armed forces, will be back in the pulpit this Sunday.

Joint Service

St. David's Anglican Church and Cordova Bay United will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the United Church of Canada at a special joint communion service Sunday.

The service will be in St. David-by-the-Sea Church, 5182 Cordova Bay road at 9:45 p.m. and will be conducted by Rev. H. Gordon Walker and Rev. Franck Patterson.

Guest speaker is the Rev. Dr. Wee Chong Tan, chaplain and director of the science program at Pearson College of the Pacific.

Keys to the churches will be exchanged, symbolizing the sharing of buildings for summer servies and social events.

Chrisfian Women's Special Feature

Irene Baker, a former model and drama coach from Bellingham, will present The Recycling of Scarves as the special feature at a Victoria Christian Women's Club luncheon June 4 at 12:30 p.m.

The two-hour luncheon meeting will be held in the Crystal Ballroom of the Empress Hotel. Soloist will be soprano Wendy King.

Reconciliation Urged for Churches

TORONTO (CP) — An open letter published in the official magazines of both the Presbyterian Church in Canada and the United Church of Canada has appealed for an "act of reconciliation" between the churches.

The originators of the letter — six prominent churchmen, three from each denomination — make it clear the purpose is not another attempt at church union but "the establishment of a consultation group to discuss matters of our closer relationship."

The letter calls upon both churches to forget their differences and the bitterness caused by the union of some Presbyterians with Methodists and Congregationalists in 1925.

"As fellow members of the Alliance World Alliance of Reformed Churches we share the doctrine, policy and practice of reformed Christianity; we share the policies and plans of the world confesional family of Presbyterian and Reformed bodies," the letter states.

The writers of the letter were three Presbyterians, Rev. Charles C. Cochrane, Montreal, Rev. William Klempa, Toronto, and Prof. Joseph C. McLelland, McGill University, and three United Churchmen, Prof. Charles L. Johnston, Saskatoon, Prof. George Johnson, McGill University, and Rev. Frank Meadows, Soskatoon.

Gov't Helps Car Owner Sue Repairer

Lo-Cost Automobile Transmission Rebuilders Ltd. of Victoria is being sued for alleged infractions of the Trade Practices Act.

The firm, located at 1901 Government, is being sued by W. V. Nykodym of Victoria and the director of trade practices will take over the court proceedings.

Nykodym is charging Lo-cost with making deceptive representations about the condition of his car's transmission and the extent of repairs required.

Just Like Robin Hood, Southern Style

A Film Review
By Nora Hutchison

Burt Reynolds is the first actor to reach stardom via the talk-show route, and he's made a style out of his awareness of the audience's reaction to him as an off-screen celebrity. He's popular with TV and movie audiences because he lets them see his

REYNOLDS
. . . country bumpkin role

jokey contempt for his profession. His message on those talk-shows is that stars are just bum out for a buck and a fast romp — and that he's no different — just a smart, funny bum who loves being a stud celebrity. Reynolds is cocky enough to be honest about this, and audiences willingly accept his version of the truth about the entertainment industry. It's a version they've wanted to hear for a long time anyway. When he's around, any solemn talk about "show-biz" seems fraudulent.

Reynold's role in Robert Aldrich's The Longest Yard was shaped to fit his talk-show image — he played a sell-out quarterback turned superstud gigolo who redeemed himself by helping a gang of football-playing convicts fight for their manhood. He bantered and joked his way through the picture with occasional time-outs for rough-house action in the jail cell or on the football field. He was a flippant, irritating smarty who was just asking to get clobbered. In his latest movie, Reynolds carries his flippant routine even further but he introduces a new element — a sort of awkward gentility that lends his role of country-bumpkin Robin Hood a note of folksiness not altogether out of character.

WW and the Dixie Dance Kings is a down-home, southern-style version of the Robin Hood fairy-tale. It concerns the adventures of a countrified jock of indeterminate age whose main preoccupation in life is to "rip-off" gas stations belonging to an oil company that once did him wrong in some unspecified way.

At the tail-end of one adventure and the beginning of the next, WW (Burt Reynolds) connects with the Dixie Dance Kings, a musical group who are about as far up-country as you can get without getting lost in a swamp. He tags along with the group as a ploy to elude a mean-looking sheriff, and evenaually persuades them — despite some heavy opposition from their leader — that as their manager, he can guide them to fame, fortune, and a spot on the stage of the Grand Ole Opry House.

Singing at the Opry House in Nashville is this group's day-dream, and since this movie is a fairy-tale of sorts, WW makes their dream come true. But before that happens, there are the usual incidents that befall such movie heroes and dreamers — a rocky love-affair between WW and Dixie the band's lead singer, several comic car-chase sequences, an inspired assault on a drive-in bank aptly named the Golden Goose, and a couple of run-ins with a Revivalist Deacon turned private-eye (Art Ctrney) who's been hired by the president of the oil company to track WW down.

WW is all sass, josh and good-humor but he's not as smart as he think he is. However, that doesn't really matter, because as his managerial act begins to falter and his schemes for obtaining money and recognition become more incredible, the group grows more protective of him. Their faith in him is shaken, but he's "family" now so they try to save him from the consequences of his schemes.

The best thing about this movie is its easy-going, forthright, no-nonsense style. Director John Avildsen plays down the sentimental aspects of the screenplay and focuses instead on the comedy inherent in the shifting relationships between the nutty back-woods con man and the hill-billy band. Avildsen is also careful not to let the period — the story is set in 1957 — interfere with or take over the movie's direction. The touchstones are there — in the music, the hairstyles, the clothes, the cars — but he focuses on them only casually. WW and the Dixie Dance Kings is like good country and western music — fun, funky, unpretentious and easy to like.

DOOBIE BROTHERS MATURE

By JON LANDAU

ROLLING STONE

The Doobie Brothers are one of the fine American rock bands. But I must admit they weren't always favorites of mine. When I first heard "Listen to the Music" on the AM radio in the summer of 1972, it seemed sanitized and empty. It suffered from a tinkling banjo in the background and simple-minded lyrics in the foreground.

But I knew that they could play then, and I learned they could play brilliantly when they released "China Grove." That record had the depth and textures of the Allman Brothers ,plus the frenzy of the Rolling Stones. While the Brothers, plus the frenzy of the Doobies are not in the same league with either group, it was still an important record, one of the hardest to ever make it big on the AM radio.

By comparison, their recent "Black Water" was smooth as silk. It proved they could mix their rock sensibility with a contemporary feeling for sound and the studio. Their producer, the marvelous Ted Templeman, had obviously come a long way with them — all the way from the emptiness of "Listen to the Music." The group was finally ready to cut its big album.

The new LP, Stampede, is a Doobies over the top as one of the three or four most popular American rock bands. It rocks, swings, soothes and never bores. It's also a good example of how smart groups are dealing with the changing economics of the business.

The 45 has once again become the key to broad popularity. The Doobies have always been singles conscious, but in this case they've doubled their consciousness. The opening cut on each side of the album is a natural hit single. "Take Me in Your Arms" was once a great Motown just-miss for Kim Weston. The Doobies have now brought their own personalities to it, while utilizing the services of sometime Motown arranger Paul Riser to give it both a true R'n'B sound and an extra touch of AM radio appeal. Tom Johnston sings the song as well as it can be done, and before the record's commercial life is over it ought to score heavily on Soul radio stations as well as pop one of the best things the ones.

The obvious follow-up, and group has ever recorded, is Sweet Maxine.

Summer Sound of Outdoor Music to Be Heard Again

Another summer that will be enhanced by the sound of music, not only from concert halls but escaping from those confines to sweeten the breezes outdoors, is just around the corner.

From actual contact with summer visitors it is clear that nothing we do in this city is more welcome and more conducive to an extended stay than turning our public squares and parks into areas where music and other performances can be enjoyed.

Every encouragement, financial and otherwise, should be given to those talented people who are willing to perform during the summer — dancers, musicians, actors.

It's a great pity, for example, that the charming and much appreciated children's shows staged by Bastion Theatre in Bastion and Centennial Squares up to last summer had to be discontinued because there was no allocation of funds for the purpose.

The program didn't involve much of an outlay but neither city nor business was willing to support it even to a modest extent.

The shows had brought hundreds of children and adults to Bastion Square in the course of a week, at least some of whom must have penetrated the boutiques and restaurants. Last summer there were no shows but much talk that Bastion Square was "dying."

Victoria Summer Festival, the brainchild of Laszlo Gati, which features a somewhat altered Victoria Symphony Orchestra, will continue to make the sunset hour sr so attractive in Heritage Court this summer.

As Gati is out of town there is no precise information on times and span of the concerts, but presumably the format will be the same as in previous years with concerts in parks as well as the museum precinct and taking in most of July and part of August.

There are also advancing plans for some capsule Gilbert and Sullivan on stage in the museum's Newcombe Auditorium for two weeks of midsummer. The performances will follow the promenade sunset symphony concerts.

On campus at University of Victoria there will be a series of chamber music concerts arranged and conducted by George Corwin and a repertory program of plays in the Phoenix Theatre.

Back to the outdoors, there will probably be found in various wall fresco settings, groups of talented and competent young musicians and actors improving in fact, the shining hour.

People will be meeting for one, a newly formed group called the Island Brass Quintet, funded by an Opportunities for Youth grant and now busily preparing for a series of informal park-and-square concerts with outdoor rehearsals on UVic campus. They are all department of music students, from second year to graduate.

Oxford String Quartet

MAILING
. . . soprano

Victoria music lovers will receive a bonus this year as a result of the problems that ousted the Shawnigan Summer School of the Arts from their lakeside setting.

The fifth year of this internatinally star-studded program is to take place at St. Michael's University School from July 28 through Aug. 28.

Throughout the four-and-a-half weeks numerous concerts will be given by the distinguished faculty and the word is that they will be available to the public.

Among the visiting artists who will perform are the Orford String Quartet, of Canada; Orion Piano Trio of England; U.S. violinist Ruggiero Ricci; Canadian soprano Phyllis Mailing; cellist Mihaly Virizlay; British pianist Clive Lythgoe; Italian double bassist Lucio Buccarella and guitarists Ako Ito and Henry Dorigny.

There are always changes in the musical personnel between the end of one season and beginning of another. Loss of good musicians will continue, possibly to a damaging extent, unless we can improve the economic situation.

A trend is developing among musicians to move away from the big cities. Most, I am told, prefer to pursue their careers under less pressure and Victoria is considered an ideal spot as far as its artistic and actual climate is concerned.

But while living is easy in one sense it is anything but in another. Expenses are high here and pay for musicians is abysmal.

However, lured by the storied beauty and balminess of Victoria and the presence of UVic's music department and the Conservatory of Music as well as the symphony, replacements do come and stay at least for a little while.

With the leaving of George Krem, top-flight trombonist for one year at UVic and with the symphony (he's been captured by the Winnipeg Symphony) a new first trombone will arrive this summer to take up the double appointment.

He is Thomas Eadie who comes via Eastman School, Chicago, the University of Western Ontario and England. His wife is also a musical addition, being an Eastman graduate flutist.

Coward, Shaw Shows Billed for Bastion

A Noel Coward comedy and a Shaw drama are among six plays set for Bastion Theatre Company's new season.

Watergate Winds Down

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Watergate special prosecutor's office hopes to close up shop by Sept. 30, but still has several investigations going which could lead to further indictments.

Special Prosecutor Henry S. Ruth, Jr., has set the autumn date for concluding the work of the office, which he has headed since the resignation of Leon Jaworski.

Among the areas still believed to be under investigation are the 18-minute gap in one of the White House tapes, the activities of Charles (Bebe) Rebozo, a close friend of former president Nixon, and several champaign contribution cases.

LAURENCE . . . inside the skin

Culture Shock as a Positive Force

By PAT BARCLAY

Remember when people used to go around saying that "travel" was "broadening"? You don't hear them saying it much anymore, maybe because the average travel experience today tends to be a commodity arranged for in advance by the booking agent back home.

For years I used to wonder in secret why it was that I never yearned to travel anywhere. Other people, some of them close friends and family, were being happily "broadened" all over the map and here I was, a contented stick-in-the-mud, at home. Obviously my head needed examining, along with my priorities. Then a year or so ago a Cambodian acquaintance told us that U.S. planes had bombed Angkor Wat, where a group of Khmer Rouge had hidden in the misguided assumption that the ancient temple would be safe from attack. The sense of personal loss with which I heard the news was accompanied by a certain relief — I was normal, after all. I hadn't known how much I'd wanted to see Angkor Wat until it was too late.

Looking back on my anti-travel period, I realize that part of the explanation was Africa. Too many people close to me lived in some part of Africa for too long and came home to rave about it — again, for too long. I have had Africa up to here for years.

Now along comes, of all things, a critical study by York University professor Clara Thomas titled The Manawaka World of Margaret Laurence. It's an engrossing, readable and rather unassuming survey of the life and work of one of Canada's major novelists but, on me at any rate, it has had one extraordinary effect. Practically in one fell swoop, it has de-anti-Africanized me.

Margaret Laurence, you see, had always known she was a writer. ("I always knew, right from the time I was able to write," she has said, "but I didn't really believe until many years later that anyone else would ever think I was a writer.") Her career did not begin in Canada, however; her first published works were about Africa where she and husband lived, first in the British protectorate of Somaliland, then on the Gold Coast (later known as Ghana) between 1950 and 1957.

Nearly a third of Dr. Thomas' book deals with the Africa writings, which include a translation of Somali tales and poems, A Tree for Poverty; a collection of short stories, The Tomorrow-Tamer; a novel, This Side Jordan; and a travel-memoir, The Prophet's Camel Bell. (A critical study of Nigerian literature titled Long Drums and Cannons appeared in 1968.)

With the help of wonderfully evocative passages quoted from the Africa writings, Dr. Thomas successfully demonstrates that for Margaret Laurence, Africa was an awakening: "Seldom has 'culture shock' had such a positive outcome; in the ranks of Canadian writers one would need to go back to Susanna Moodie to find a counterpart . . . Her experiences of Africa issued in works that explored themes of exile, loss, and mankind's stubborn, valiant quests for home and freedom; they also led her to see that these themes were particularly urgent to her own people as well. For culturally, Canada is also an emergent nation."

Laurence's superb ability to get inside the skins of her characters quickens even the brief excerpts which Dr. Thomas quotes. The quality of the Africa writings can be suggested by noting that The Prophet's Camel Bell was completed in 1962, a year which had earlier seen completion of the first draft of The Stone Angel.

Dr. Thomas deals with each of the Manawaka novels in turn, showing, for example, that Rachel's humility is the reverse side of Hagar's pride, and that whereas Rachel and Hagar are "grotesques" until they achieve "some self-knowledge," it is not Stacey, but Stacey's milieu that is "grotesque." Her comments on Laurence's use of voice and structure are very well done indeed, and a chapter which assembles the geography of Manawaka, heretofore seen only in selected fragments distributed through the novels, is especially valuable.

Dr. Thomas' prose style is mercifully free of pedantry and polysyllabic overkill. Her admiration for Laurence's work shows in the few quiet criticisms she deftly lets slip, never in overblown praise. Wisely, she understands that straightforward explication of the novels is all we need to convince us of their value.

But — as usual there is a "but" — I do wish Dr. Thomas had chosen to discuss Morag Gunn, the heroine of The Diviners, and her relationship to her creator. Only one of Laurence's works of fiction, A Bird in the House, has been acknowledged as autobiographical, although Laurence herself has stated that her characters are "aspects" of her own personality. But Morag, the writer, and her understanding of her craft — what critic could resist comparing her to her creator?

Oh well. Where Dr. Thomas' work does lead us is back to the novels, where our natural curiosity more properly belongs. And where our perceptions of their sensual and emotional power will have been heightened by greater understanding of the intelligence at work behind them.

'I Try to Pay Attention All the Time'

By COLMAN McCARTHY

One of my local libraries has four books under Allen Ginsberg's name: three are about him, one by him. The card catalogue reflects a common reaction to the author of "Howl," "Kaddish" and other volumes of poetry: Ginsberg has more spectators than readers.

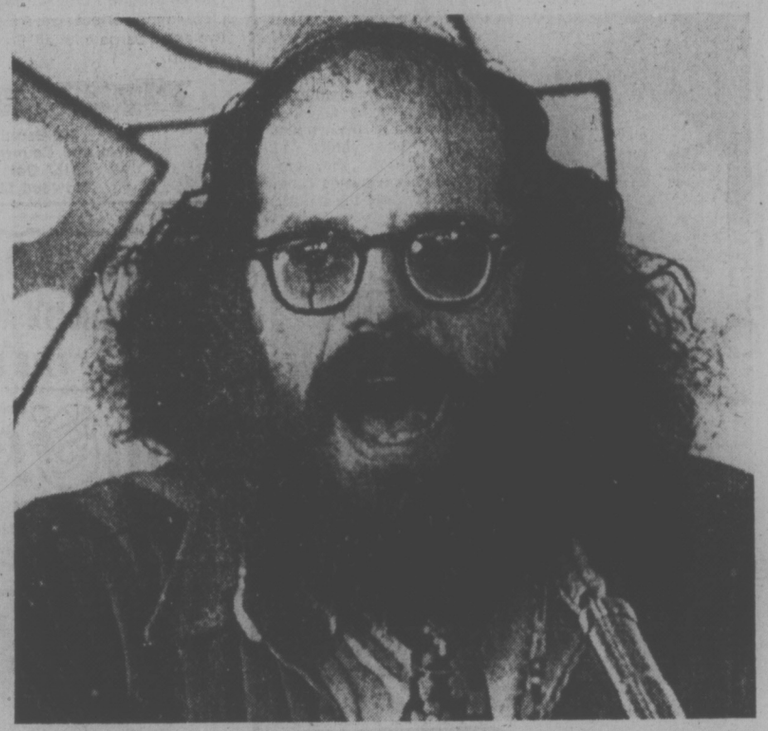
Only a few days ago, The New York Times ran an artist's portrait of Ginsberg at the top of its second section, but in the accompanying text not a line appeared about the poet or his thoughts. He was a decoration, his mothy, bushy beard and shiny pate easy on the eyes.

As a brand name, a Hershey bar or Campbell soup can on the shelf of America's literature, Ginsberg still sells by the ingredient labelling "Time" stuck on him in 1959: the "recognized leader of the pack of oddballs who celebrate booze, dope, sex and despair, and who go by the name of beatniks."

Ginsberg himself is aware of how he comes on. When testifying before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee in 1966, he told the senators: "I hope that whatever prejudgment you may have of me or my bearded image you can suspend so that we can talk together as fellow beings in the same room of now, trying to come to some harmony and peacefulness between us. I am a little frightened to present myself, the fear of your rejection of me, the fear of not being tranquil enough to reassure you that we can talk together, make sense, and perhaps even like each other — enough to want not to offend, or speak in a way which is abrupt or hard to understand."

The good senators didn't reject the poet who has been placed by some critics in the Walt Whitman tradition of using poetic language, in Ginsberg's words, as a way "to invent our own lives, make our own miracles." Although Ginsberg wasn't visiting the senators to discuss his esthetic methods of versification, he fulfilled the obligation he spoke of in a poem, of poets who should

Live
In the physical world
Moment to moment
I must write down
Every recurring thought
Stop every beating second.



GINSBERG . . . waiting for wave to crash

From the flow of his work, it often seems that Ginsberg has missed few beating seconds. His place in American literature is less because of the power of his poetry — judgments on that will come later — than because of the energy of his communication. At a time when more citizens are writing and reading poetry — many of the mental hospitals finding utility in poetry therapy — Ginsberg and his poems, journals, diaries and interviews offer a style of production that says no part of life is unworthy of articulation.

"I try to pay attention all the time," he told an interviewer in "The Craft of Poetry," edited by William Packard. "The writing itself, the sacred act of writing, when you do anything of this nature, is like prayer. The act of writing being done sacramentally, if pursued over a few minutes, becomes like a meditation exercise which brings on a recall of detailed consciousness that is an approximation of high consciousness. High epiphanous mind . . . And if you get into a writing thing that will take you all day, you get deeper and deeper into your central consciousness."

Poets like Blake and Whitman always had that as their goal, however unattainable. If Ginsberg differs from those two, it is because, as Thomas Merrill said in his Ginsberg biography, "publicity, not poetic form, was probably the real innovation" in such works as "Howl." In 1956, on publication of what Ginsberg "sees through and all around the horrors he partakes of in that metrical vastness — the first section of "Howl" is 78 lines but all of it is one sentence — an obscenity trial was held.

Nothing came of it, except that a number of critics rallied to the defense of the poem. The obscenity trial did produce one thought — offered by the poem's publisher, Lawrence Ferlinghetti — that is relevant today when obscenity charges are thrown at books that some citizens find subjectively offensive: "It is not revealed as obscene. The great obscene wastes of 'Howl' are the sad wastes of the mechanized world, lost among atom bombs and insane nationalisms."

Ginsberg assuredly has never been a nationalist. He has kicked around in India, the East, Mexico, the Arctic and, recently, in the tribal territories of Australia. He is 49, lives in New York and often gives poetry readings with his father, Louis Ginsberg.

A few years ago he spent time researching the involvement of the FBI and CIA in some of their undercover games; at the time, many believed Ginsberg should have stuck with poetry, but his finds about government snooping have proven not to be fantasies.

As with many poets, he cares little for the values of American progress — pushed by "money junkies" — and believes that catastrophes occur so quickly and so often that citizens become inured to them. "Intellectually people care but it seems like America is so sunk in scandal and debauchery and corruption and disillusionment it's like a great wave of horror that nobody can fight against — everybody's just floating on the tide, waiting for the wave to crash."

That's not a new notion — Job, Jeremiah and others raised it a few thousand years ago — but Ginsberg has been able to cut classes from the School of Modern Complaints. In "Allen Verbatim," published last year as accounts of his lectures at Kent State, the University of Wyoming and other schools, he discusses the uselessness of repetitious condemnations of the system.

"Where is everybody gonna go? I'm still using a car. I vowed not to get on planes this year, and I'm gonna wind up on a plane I'm sure. I'm still getting and spending in a world too much with me. If I can't control myself I don't see how the mass of people are able to control themselves without ever having the conscious perception that I do of the disastrousness of my behavior. Generalizations about the . . . behavior of the American populace make no sense unless one can begin with oneself and dredge one's own harbors."

Who wouldn't give an Om for that thought? How often is it heard from politicians, statesmen or others who have a platform that they are going to put in some work on their own interior lives before they impose their visionary plans on everyone else? Ginsberg is a poet who is repeating in contemporary ways what Whitman said a century ago: that the nation's work has to start from within.

PETER MURRAY - EDITOR

Mary Hemingway with husband's books

HEMINGWAY EXHUMED

By ROBERT REINHOLD

WALTHAM, Mass. — In an antiseptic setting that seems alien to the barrel-chested and hard-living novelist and adventurer, the literary remains of Ernest Hemingway are being opened here for research.

Fumigated, cleaned, deacidified, indexed and stuffed into 25 linear feet of gray library boxes, nearly the entire written and photographic heritage left by the great author has been collected here, far from his favorite tropical and European haunts.

More than 13 years after he ended his own life with a shotgun blast, the first portion of Hemingway's papers were opened recently at the temporary home of the John F. Kennedy Library here. The papers were deposited by Hemingway's widow, Mary, who lives in New York and is executrix of his estate. She personally retrieved them from such diverse spots as Ketchum, Idaho; Havana, and the back room of Sloppy Joe's Bar in Key West, Fla.

Opened were the original manuscripts — some in Hemingway's own hand, others typed — of the author's most famous works, among them "A Farewell to Arms," "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "A Moveable Feast," "Islands in the Stream," "The Old Man of the Sea" and "The Sun Also Rises."

But not everything is here. A notable omission is "Garden of Eden," an unpublished 1946 novel that Carlos Baker, his biographer at Princeton, has called "strange" and "filled with ineptitudes." It was withheld by Mrs. Hemingway, a vigilant guardian of her husband's posthumous reputation. Not yet ready for release are his thousands of personal letters and the manuscripts of his short stories, magazine and newspaper articles.

But the 15,000 pages that are available should now provide scholars with years of work unravelling the mystery of this endlessly fascinating and controversial literary figure, who won both the Nobel and the Pulitzer Prizes for literary achievement. Though his reputation has suffered at the hands of some critics, Hemingway remains an enormously popular writer, two generations after he wrote his best works. Professors say students read him avidly and his publisher, Scribner's, continues to sell a million Hemingway books a year, mostly in paperback.

Among the more fascinating items are two original beginnings of "The Sun Also Rises" that were eventually discarded, one at the urging of his friend and fellow author F. Scott Fitzgerald. In addition, there is an unpublished chapter for "A Moveable Feast" about Fitzgerald and a nine-page pre-publication critique in pencil of "A Farewell to Arms" by Fitzgerald.

At one point, after telling Hemingway that a certain portion "ought to be thoroughly cut — even rewritten", he seems to have had misgivings: "Our poor old friendship probably did not survive this but there you are — better me than somebody in the Literary Review that doesn't care about you or your future." A couple of pages later he ended with the comment, "a beautiful book it is!"

Gory Anecdotes Making Him a Mint

By RAYMOND GARDNER

How Now, Brown Cow? Very nicely, thank you, James Herriot discovered as, arm wedged to the elbow up the bovine's orifice, he made contact with yet another reluctant calf.

There was no sign of an eversion of the uterus after the birth and for that everyone was grateful. An eversion is unpleasant. It happens when the cow forgets to stop straining after the birth and pushes her entire uterus out among her hocks. Very nasty.

Few cows seem to want the thing back and, to quote Herriot, "in a straightforward contest between man and beast, the odds are very much on the cow."

And there can be complications. Herriot's partner once spent half a morning trying to stuff a cow's uterus up the poor thing's rectum and the point that has worried him ever since is that he almost succeeded.

All of which may be very interesting to the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons but hardly, one would assume, suitable material for your memoirs. But that is just what it has become, and no one seems more surprised than James Herriot, whose gory anecdotes have taken him into the bestseller charts both in Britain and in America.

His cows and sheep and horses have found themselves translated into 12 languages — what does a Yorkshire accent sound like in Japanese? — and this summer they will be appearing at your friendly local cinema in "All Creatures Great and Small," with Simon Ward playing the part of the author which, considering the actor's previous role (Sir Winston Churchill), makes Herriot feel very humble.

HERRIOT . . . stumped by skunk

Herriot is a pseudonym. The Royal College doesn't approve of advertising and interviewers are sworn to great secrecy before they may penetrate Herriot's habitat "somewhere in Yorkshire."

Not that the locals are unaware of the fame in their midst. A pregnant silence comes over the tweeds and pink gins when Herriot rolls into the local county hostelry — whether in awe at his success or out of respect for his profession, vets being second only to God in these parts, one will never know.

It Shouldn't Happen to a Vet, the title in England of first book, appeared in 1970. It sold 3,000 copies and after much deliberation was reprinted. It is now in its sixth impression. His latest, "Vet in Harness," is starting with a 30,000 print order.

In America the public has gone bananas, to quote Herriot's British publisher, Michael Joseph, although a few amendments were needed before Herriot found himself taking up space in Time Magazine. The American publisher didn't like the titles, and the books were too short, and why didn't they have better endings?

Herriot wrote a few linking chapters between his first and second books, got himself married off — yes, to the farmer's daughter — and everyone was very happy. That only left the title. Mr. America suggested "All Things Bright and Beautiful," to which Herriot came back with "All Creatures Great and Small." Mr. America won and Herriot found himself on an American promotion tour.

He smiles at the thought. There he was, staring from a series of advertisements in the New York Times Book Review and from the front cover of Book News. Hollywood may have gone bust but his hotel in Beverly Hills was very nice, thank you. But why did he ever agree to take part in a radio phone-in? And then there were the bookshop signings.

"I've done it all here," he says, "but in America they bring their bloody pets to the bookshop and there I was signing away my life's work with dedications to Fluffy or a couple of hamsters called Herman and Lucy. I thought we were crazy over pets but the Americans . . ."

And the phone-in?

A terrible silence comes over the Herriot household. "Well, there I had an audience of millions and was feeling quite cocky, thinking that after 35 years as a vet I could answer anything anyone threw at me, when this lady asks me what she should do about her pet skunk. I was just sweating that one out when the next caller wants to know about her pet alligator. I mean it.

"The program's presenter assured me that New Yorkers sent away for such things and that when they were young they were quite pleasant. Apparently when the alligators get larger they are flushed down the lavatory. I am reliably informed that the sewers of New York are alive with man-eating alligators."

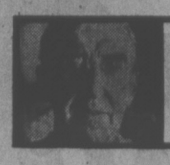
Garden Know-How from Experience



GARDENING
jack beastall

This week I would like to help those gardening for the first time, not with a lot of do's and don'ts, but with a few facts we oldtimers learned quite early in the game.

They are the kind of things at which gardeners nod their heads and mutter "of course, everyone knows that". The point is, everyone does not know it. We, in our time, didn't know it until someone took the trouble to tell us.

We heard others talking about annuals, biennials and perennials, this genus and that genus, and we reached the hazy assumption it all had to do with different kinds of plants.

We were very proud when we learned to recognize one plant and could spot it in gardens, calling it by name. Then someone showed us a totally different plant and gave it the same name. What a letdown that was.

After spending hard earned money on a dozen petunias and discovering the reason they did not appear again next spring, we learned the differences between annuals, biennials and perennials.

The number of calls received each spring from beginners asking what has happened to their marigolds and other annuals bought last year is proof these differences are not clearly understood.

Annuals are plants which grow from seed sown in the spring, produce flowers and sometimes seed, then finish their life cycle. The common bedding plants are in this group.

There are two types of annuals, hardy and tender. Often the hardy annuals will disperse their seed in the fall and give plants the following year. This leads beginners to believe the plants are perennials. Tender annuals do not produce seed that is hardy enough to survive winter conditions in, or on, the soil.

Annuals, or bedding annuals, are the cheapest plants because their garden life is limited. We use them as color accents for the one season, then pull them up and add to the compost heap to make more soil.

If we look upon annuals as one year, or one-season plants, we could call biennials two year or two-season plants. Their total life span is not much longer than annuals, but the seed is sown in June and the seedlings transplanted to permanent beds in early September, and they grow into strong plants before the growing season ends.

The following spring the flowers are produced and that is the end of their life, so we pull them up and add to the compost. Wallflowers, Forget-me-nots, and Canterbury-bells are three commonly grown biennials. The seed must be sown in late spring, or plants purchased in the summer of the previous year. Plants are not available at the time of flowering.

Confusing to the beginner is the yellow Siberian Wallflower which is almost a perennial, coming up year after year; and the fact that certain colors near to the wild forms of the common biennial wallflower will often live over winter in our climate, and sometimes flower for several years. But this does not happen with the more delicate colors.

Many of our vegetables are biennials, in the first year making roots or top growth which we eat. To obtain seed, we have to store the roots over winter and plant again in the spring. The plants then flower and produce seed.

Any conditions which cause a check in growth of vegetable seedlings acts like winter storage. When growth resumes the plants make their flowers and seeds.

It is all a matter of chemicals within the plants. Parsnips, for example, store energy in their roots as sugars. When growth starts the following season these sugars turn to indigestible starches, making the plants unsuitable for consumption.

In onions and garlic the oils change when the little green sprout appears at the centre. This change causes the strong odor when cooked and tainting of the breath. Any check in growth during the seedling stage can activate these changes.

Perennial is an ambiguous term. Its dictionary meaning is "through a year", but in gardening it applies to roots which persist more than two years.

In this sense trees, shrubs, vines, and soft stemmed flowering plants are all perennials, even though the life span of trees can be longer than that of man, while some of the border perennials may persist for only five years.

Because of the wide range of plants which can be classed as perennials, the use of the term is often restricted and qualified. In gardening we use the term woody perennials for trees, and for shrubs having wood-like stems; herbaceous perennials for those plants with soft stems that wither in the fall but are replaced with new growth the following spring; short-lived perennials for plants needing replacement in approximately five years; long-lived perennials for vines, creepers, paeonies and other plants which may last from 10 years to 100 years.

Usually, we can get along very well without any knowledge of these terms until we start investing money in plants. Then we discover that some plants sell for one dollar a dozen while others cost three to ten dollars each.

It is quite natural the beginner should look for quantity when buying plants, but quantity at a low price indicates a short life in the garden. The plants which live for years, flowering and increasing in size and beauty, are the ones in the higher price brackets.

Annuals are the plants we use during our first years of gardening. They are bought by the dozen and give a fine display with the minimum of care.

As knowledge and experience increase we tire of pulling up annuals in the fall and replanting in the spring, and having desolate empty beds to view over winter. We find the need for something more permanent as a base for a year-round garden.

It is then we need to know the different kinds of perennials, woody, herbaceous, short or long lived, so that we do not invest our money unwisely.

Beginners as well as more advanced gardeners feel that growers and vendors of plants should specify how long the plants are likely to persist in the garden. This is usually done by stating they are annuals, biennials or perennials, but the customer often fails to realize the importance of these terms.

Even when we get our annuals, biennials and perennials sorted out there are still a few more things we have to learn. In nearly every genus there are plants which fall into two or more categories. For example, we have annual asters and perennial asters, and annual, biennial, herbaceous perennial, and shrubby centaurea.

We also have to remember that many plants which are perennial in warmer climates, and listed as perennials in gardening books, will only last as annuals in our climate.

Then we have those plants which are perennial in our climate but are grown as biennials for a given reason. Hollyhock is one treated in this manner to avoid spread of the hollyhock-rust.

To the beginner it is all very confusing; but don't let it worry you, for there is never a dull moment when your hobby is gardening. You will learn something new every day if your eyes and ears are sharp, and you will be learning fifty years hence — if you are still gardening.

WORK FOR WEEK

By JACK BEASTALL

Should be possible to sow bush and runner (pole) beans now. Make sowings according to needs, then succession sowings later during the next month. Sow sweet corn also, remembering to use short rows in a block for cross wind pollination.

Shear spring flowering heathers lightly to keep dense and good looking all summer, and full of bloom next year.

Plant out begonias and geranimus this week if nights show signs of becoming warmer—should be between 10 and 15 deg. Celsius.

As daffodil and other narcissus leaves become limp, cut them off at surface. Do not pull them off, or the pulb scales will be damaged and bulbs may rot.

Tomato, pepper, eggplant, squash and cucumber plants can be planted out during this coming week if nights are warmer. Otherwise try to grow them on in containers and put them out in daytime and into a cool place at night that is warmer than outdoors. Hopefully a warm spell after planting will bring these semi-tropicals along.

RECORD ROLL OF AMERICANS ON WELFARE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More Americans are on welfare than at any other time in history, according to the latest health, education and welfare department statistics.

The figures for February, the latest month available, show 11,239,611 children and adults received help under the Aid to Families with Depdendent Children Program. The previous peak was in March, 1973, with 11,155,959 recipients.

When the 1973 record was set, the Nixon administration publicized the huge welfare rolls and the need for welfare reform.

Dentist Visits Bushes

TAHSIS, B.C. (CP) — When Robert Patton, a dentist from Vancouver, flies to this small community on Vancouver Island to visit his patients, he knows the caseload may be as high as 60 a day.

In these weekend visits, "getting away from it all" means visiting patients who rarely see a dentist and require serious dental care.

Dr. Patton is one of nine dentists from the Greater Vancouver area who do volunteer to work a monthly clinic operated by the Nootka mission seven miles north of here at Esperanza.

When he touches down on Tahsis Inlet he brings with him June Boie, his assistant, who helps him with the patients and instructs the children in proper care of the teeth. Often they work 14 hours a day to see patients who have travelled from settlements along 50 miles of the rugged west coast area of the island.

This is bush country, where settlements are isolated and few have their own dentists. Dr. Patton's patients are from Indian villages, logging camps and mills.

The only dentist's office many of the patients have ever visited is the tiny room set up in the mission's basement. Many have serious dental problems because they see dentists so irregularly.

"Like this little girl I just finished," said Dr. Patton. "She's probably never been to the dentist. She had rampant decay in every quarter of her mouth. We did a crown, seven fillings and three root canals on her."

Gary Hall, a dentist from Burnaby who also works at the mission, said such intensive work sessions can be a strain on the best of a doctor's patients.

"But the rural people are easier. Maybe they don't have the fixations and anxieties of city people. They're very willing to accept stress, especially the children."

One of the patients, James Reid, 14, said children here would probably observe better dental care rules if parents had started them when they were younger.

"Until last year I didn't brush my teeth and had a lot of decay," he said. "So I smartened up and I'm brushing now."

Dr. Patson said the volunteer doctors are asking the provincial government for funds to buy two or three operating chairs so the work can be done more efficiently. One of the chairs now in use is an antique.

"We could do three or four times as much work and we still wouldn't be satisfying the needs of the area," he said.

Several dentists have volunteered to join the program so that no dentist will have to visit the mission more than twice a year. Dr. Patton has been visiting the mission since 1967 when the program began.

He said the patients of the clinic pay regular rates if they can and the proceeds go to the mission.

Excitement Shucked For Reality

TORONTO (CP) — The producer of a television series on court cases says he uses real judges and lawyers and has chosen juries from the studio audience in an attempt to show reality, even at the risk of losing excitement.

"I retain a loathing for the manufactured situation," David Pears said. "To get the real-life situation it's worth the 95-percent chance of losing the excitement."

After a program about a kidnapping case was taped, Mr. Pears said: "We've got a very unexciting program on our hands.

"By the time we cut it down to an hour it's surprising how exciting it will be. It will improve the pace."

Judges and lawyers in On the Evidence—to be shown on CBC Saturday sights starting June 21—are volunteers from the Canadian Bar Association who receive no pay and are identified by their real names. Other characters, except jurors, are played by actors who are briefed on a case but given no lines.

Hollis McLaren, who played a girl kidnapped from a Roman Catholic retreat house by her father and a deprogrammer, said actors made up details of the case in the makeup room.

"It's a matter of creating a life and feeling, and I adopted timidity for the role," she said.

Education Cradle-Grave Enrichment

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — People are going back to school in increasing numbers across Canada, says the director of the Canadian Education Association's course in educational leadership.

Education is shifting from schooling in preparation for a career to a cradle-to-grave system for the enrichment of individual life, said Dr. Tom Williams, also chairman of the department of educational administration of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education in Toronto.

Dr. Williams and 85 school superintendents, trustees, teacher federation presidents, representatives of adult education associations and of ministries of education have just completed the association's 23rd annual two-week course here.

The shift in the goals of education has been developing along with a drastic change in social values, he said in an interview.

"We are assigning high priority to the individual. Do your own thing. Be your own person. There used to be one acceptable educational mold, the fully academic one. Now education is being defined as anything to improve the quality of life."

And people are beginning to balance the trend toward quality of life against the materialistic trend. They want education for leisure and fulfilment instead of a house, a boat and two cars.

"Some people translate that as a generation gap, but it's not. The kids are causing adults to ask the right questions. How important is life? How important are symbols? Probably the youth cult has caused adults to start questioning their own values."

But it's demanding that school systems develop in a hurry the ability to adapt to rapidly-changing social needs, Dr. Williams said.

"If they don't, they'll have to accept the fact they're going to become insignificant social institutions. There used to be one ladder. Now people are saying, that's not for me. It's a tremendously exciting time to be an educational administrator. It's scary at the same time."

Open House For Music

The Victoria Conservatory of Music will hold an open house June 11 from 2 to 5 p.m. at Craigdarroch Castle, 1050 Joan Crescent.

Prospective students, parents and the general public may come and observe teaching and listen to performances in the auditorium.

Guests of honor will be Lt.-Gov. Walter Owen and Mrs. Owen.

Potato Soup Velvet Smooth

By MARY MOORE

Modesty is a lovely virtue but right now I am submerging it.

This blender potato soup is so gorgeous I want to shout the recipe from my housetop with a magaphone.

It is velvet smooth and delicate. You could make your reputation as a hostess and cook by serving it as a first course at a dinner party.

Or do as I did and serve it as the main attraction for a soup and sandwich Sunday noon snack for weekend guests.

BLENDER POTATO SOUP

(Quick Vichysoisse—serves 6)

3 medium potatoes (cut into 6ths measured 2 cups)
1 onion coarsely chopped
2 slices bacon, chopped
2 c. water
½ tsp. salt
2 chicken bouillon cubes
2 c. 2 per cent milk
Finely chopped parsley

In a pot combine pared cut up potatoes, onion, bacon, water and salt. Cook covered until potatoes are very tender. Cool this down enough to pour into your blender goblet. (Don't take chances on breaking your blender goblet with too hot liquid.) Blend until you have a smooth puree. I had 4 cups.

Tip into top of double boiler and add chicken bouillon cubes and milk. Mix well and heat through until very hot.

Call your family or guests to the table then serve the soup in preheated cream soup bowls generously sprinkled with finely chopped parsley.

I served ours with whole wheat liverwurst sandwiches. If you are going to use this for a swank dinner party be sure to omit botatoes from the main course and serve one green and one yellow vegetable with the meat of your choice. Dessert should be light and fruity.

Write to Mary Moore, 32 Churchill Ave., Hamilton, Ont., enclosing stamped self-addressed envelope and 10 cents for each specified recipe.

Wheelchair applicants and pushers are required for the Arbutus Crafts Association's five-mile "Wheel-a-thon," to be held Sunday, June 15.

It will start at 9 a.m. in the parking lot at the intersection of Foul Bay Road and Lansdowne. The route will run east to Cadboro Bay Road, north to Cedar Hill Cross Road, west to the university, around Circle Drive, to Finnerty and McKenzie, then back onto Circle Drive and to the Lansdowne starting point where light refreshments will be provided.

For safety reasons, all wheelchair entrants must wear seat belts.

The wheel-a-thon was initiated two years ago by founder of the association for the physically handicapped, Mrs. Phillis Sutton, as a means of generating money to enable the association to continue providing services to the disabled. $5,371 was raised that year.

The goal this year is to raise $7,500, a sum which is urgently needed, said association president Derek Dashwood.

He said the association is faced with increased expenditures due to inflationary costs of supplies, operation of the centre and transportation of the disabled to the centre and home again.

"We are trying to provide a meaningful activity and work ethic as well as a recreation centre for the handicapped," Dashwood said.

"It means a lot to people who might otherwise be confined at home because of their physical disabilities ... we want them to feel useful, to be able to get out and find that they can do something meaningful and earn some money rather than being handed it."

He said 75 cents of every dollar in sales goes to the handicapped who produce the goods.

Although there are over 100 volunteers who help at the centre, there are also seven full-time employees whose salaries must be met.

Dashwood said even if the fund-raising campaign is successful and a Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation grant is approved, the association's projected deficit by June of 1976 will be $13,712.

"Obviously, we must find additional funding quickly, or decrease the level of services we are attempting to provide to the disabled," he said.

Family of 29 Fights Cancer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Twenty-nine members of one family, all victims or potential victims of inherited cancer, are being treated at Ohio State University Clinical Research Centre.

Five other families are under study in relation to the same cancer, but a centre spokesman said the incidence is most widespread among the Wampler family.

Dr. Jack George, director of the centre, said a type of thyroid cancer is involved.

If either parent has the cancer type, 50 per cent of the children are likely to develop it, he said. The body's excessive production of the common hormone calcitonin is a sign of the cancer.

When an excess shows up in members of susceptible families, the recommended treatment is surgical removal of the entire thyroid gland, George explained.

"We now have a very sensitive test to pick this up by measuring hormones in the blood," he said.

Her 39-year-old husband, Gene, had neck surgery for the cancer more than two years ago. In March, 1974, he had a liver tumor removed.

Twice a week, he goes to the OSU center for injections of transfer factor, the immunization researchers are studying as an aid to cancer victims, whose own defence mechanisms have faltered.

Two of the Wampler's sons, Darrell, 18, and Day Dale, 12, have had their thyroid glands removed and take regular replacement dosages of thyroid and vitamin D.

The third son, Dwayne, 15, has the regular six-month blood tests for any change in the hormone levels.

The Wamplers had been aware of a family problem for a long time, Mrs. Wampler said, but never checked with doctors.

Three years ago, a cousin in nearby Granville, was in hospital for a back problem, but had unexpected surgery when doctors found a lump in his neck.

That's when all members of the family line, including a branch in Virginia, had check-ups and began the treatment.

Mrs. Wampler said the university has traced the family back to "three brothers who came over from Germany, including the name of the ship they came in."

Birth, Fertility Rates At Record Low in U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Census Bureau says women are having fewer children than at any time in U.S. history but the population of the United States will continue to grow for a few more generations.

In its annual population estimate, the bureau said both the birth and fertility rates of women dropped to record lows in 1974.

Because more women are reaching child-bearing age, however, the total population will keep going up for some time yet.

The bureau put the 1974 birthrate — numbers of births per 1,000 persons — at 14.9, the same as in 1973, the lowest level ever.

More indicative of the trend is the total fertility rate — the number of children the average woman will have in her lifetime based on current births among women of child-bearing age.

In 1974, the fertility rate indicated showed women in that age group would have slightly over 1.8 children. In 1957, at the peak of the "baby boom," the figure was 3.7

The current fertility rate is well under the 2.1 children per mother which would reach the "replacement level" — the average number of births required over a period of 70 years to hold the U.S. population constant.

Demographers point to the increasing use of birth control, fewer teen-age marriages and desire for smaller families as reasons for the declines

However, the population will rise sharply rather than fall in the years ahead because of differences in the nation's age structure and a relatively constant death rate.

The boom babies of the 1950s make up "a young adult boom" today, with females in the key child-bearing ages of 18 to 34 constituting 13.4 per cent of the population in 1975 compared with 10.8 per cent in 1961.

Census experts estimate that if couples should decide to have children at the 2.1 per family replacement level the U.S. population in the year 2025 would be almost 300 million — about 30 per cent higher than now.

Pretty protectors . . .

Starting to rain as we write this . . . so it seems very appropriate that we should tell you about the gay, pretty umbrellas just arrived at Wilson's . . . Nothing stodgy about these brollies, we assure you! . . . Floral prints and stripes to breathe defiance at the elements . . . One real fun umbrella in a newspaper print . . . (you can even read it while you're waiting for your bus!) . . . Umbrellas with prints on the outsides and a plain lining inside for a nice finished look . . . and a new folding umbrella that's honestly easy to open and close . . . something that even our arthritic fingers can manage with the greatest of ease! . . . Wilson's also have a new shipment of all sorts of "little" goodies like spectacle cases, coin purses and the like . . . Some of these latter are in corduroy, others in tapestry, gold or silver . . . All sorts of colors . . . and cosmetic cases are either flat or in two different boxy styles with inside mirror . . . There are some new suede jewellery rolls . . . one of the most useful things you can own if you do any travelling . . . Genuine leather clutch purses, eyeglass cases and coin purses from Italy . . . pretty pillboxes to carry in your purse. Divided into two compartments, they're big enough to carry your saccharine, and any other pills you might need . . . If your eyes aren't what they used to be at reading price tags, menus, etc. . . . you'll enjoy owning one of the little folding lorgnettes in its oriental brocade case . . . Feminine as all get-out . . . and darned useful, to boot! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177, and 1210 Newport Ave., 592-2821.

How to be a beautiful bride . . .

Here we are comining up into June . . . which to us always suggests June brides . . . though every month is a happy wedding month for someone! . . . Anyway we did visit the Bridal salon at Miss Frith's to get the gen on all the newest bridal fashion trends . . . If you're a June bride, you've probably got everything you need, at this stage . . . but if the big day is later on, don't do another thing until you've seen Miss Frith's absolutely fabulous collection of gorgeous gowns for summer . . . and the equally gorgeous ones which are starting to come in for fall! . . . Among the latter we were shown some dreamy creations last Monday . . . some with a more sophisticated look, like the softly-draping polyester jersey with round lace yoke, lace insets on the sleeves, and full cuff . . . Another of those sinuous polyester jerseys is a symphony of simplicity with its low round neck, high empire waist and long sleeves . . . all of which are edged with the narrowest of guipure . . . There are lots of chiffons made rich with lace and pearl embroidery . . . A conversation-piece of a gown made of Shefield lace . . . (rather like grandma's lace curtains, but ever so much prettier!) . . . Really, just looking at all these magnificent gowns is breath-taking! What's more, they're not only sized, but styled, to bring the best out of girls of all dimensions . . . from petites right through to the larger sizes . . . Headpieces of all descriptions to wear with these . . . Newest in this line is the Jane Eyre bonnet . . . bonnet-shaped headpiece with huge white silk roses on top, tying under the chin with veiling! . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1919 Douglas St., 383-7181.

Bridesmaids' dresses nowadays are being styled in such a way that they can be worn for all sorts of other occasions, including school graduations.

Getting in shape for summer . . .

Far-away hairdressers have been having such a field day with our tresses these past months, that it was pretty nice to get back to the House of Glamour where you just know that . . . whichever stylist does your hair . . . it's going to turn out perfect! . . . This week we found that Tom Vasilkopoulos . . . who left H. of G. something over a year ago . . . is back there again and is happy at his return . . . as is everyone else at House of Glamour . . . not to mention Tom's faithful customers. If you've been one of them in the past, but lost track of him now you know. He'll give you a big welcome! Or you might like to try him for the first time, as we did on Monday . . . He gave us a new permanent and styling which looks simply super! . . . Hair unbellevably soft . . . and with just the right amount of curl to hold our fine, skimpy hair in a nice set! . . . Maybe you should be thinking of a new perm yourself to get your hair in shape for summer . . . Either that or have it cut short . . . If you elect the latter, it will just need shaping, cutting and blow drying . . . with maybe a Mini-Vague for a bit of extra body . . . You'd be smart to have a couple of conditioning treatments too . . . This is the time of year when prevention can be better than cure! . . . House of Glamour tells us that the very newest looks are very curly, . . . almost frizzy, hair . . . or all straight . . . Naturally these styles are not for everybody . . . but you can trust H. of G. stylists to tell you frankly if one of them is for you . . . In any case, try a new blond shade, or have your hair "painted" for gleaming, natural highlights . . . House of Glamour, 1175 Douglas St., 386-6188.

One of the hottest new jewellery crazes is the whistle on a chain . . . to be blown in case you're attacked. Sad commentary on our times!

Need a half-size pant suit? . . .

While we were browsing among Charmante's excellent selection of summer pant suits this week . . . it was pointed out to us that several of these were in half sizes . . . a fact that should come as welcome news to some of you because if one's figure calls for such . . . wearing a half-size garment . . . particularly a pant suit . . . can make a world of difference in the way it looks on you! The ones we saw are short-sleeved polyesters in a small blue and white check . . . sized as large as 22½ . . . Among the regular sized suits are some sleeveless ones . . . Also smart pure wool doubleknits which make such excellent travellers . . . A four-piece blue knit suit has jacket, pants, skirt and top . . . Sizes 14 and 16 in this . . . Also noticed a lovely Kimberley knit in a size 16 . . . Turning from the pantsuits to the robes . . . we thought the hooded robes in striped nylon with a terry finish . . . hot pink and white, or multi-colored stripes . . . were particularly versatile . . . As good to wear beside the pool or on the beach, as in the bedroom . . . With one of these you can cut down on the amount of your luggage . . . They're a breeze to wash too . . . Charmante's have some snappy golf skirts and jackets . . . the very sight of which should improve one's game! . . . Short button-down the front skirts with big pockets to hold tees and balls . . . A white acrylic knit jacket with embroidered golfing motifs . . . We were delighted with the new shipment of Ports blouses in 100% cotton . . . Floral patterns and small gingham checks . . . Charmante's, Hillside Shopping Centre, 595-1555.

The smock — loose and easy and long-sleeved — is THE thing to breeze through summer in, according to Vogue magazine.

Fresh is the watchword . . .

More than a week after Mother's Day we happened to be at a friend's home and couldn't help remarking on a beautiful bouquet of flowers that looked as if it had just arrived . . . Not so, said our friend . . . Each of her two sons had sent flowers in time for the Day . . . but one lot had faded in jig time . . . while, this, the second, was as lovely as ever . . . Upon further inquiry we learned that the fresh-looking ones were from Island Florist . . . which just bears out what we've been telling you all along! . . . Island's flowers are fresher! . . . But Island Florist is more than just a flower shop . . . it's a mighty exciting gift shop too . . . This week they're featuring Pym's perfume . . . Gardenia and the brand new Carnation . . . both of which come in little book-shaped containers . . . Other Pym fragrances, like Alpine Flowers, Wood Violet, Rose, etc. . . . are in purse sizes . . . There are some darling "little people" too . . . pixies at play . . . which make nice additions to planters or terrariums . . . Speaking of terrariums, Island Florist have big empty bottles which lie on their sides on the floor . . . You can buy these and make your own terrarium . . . or have Island Florist do it for you . . . We saw a startlingly beautiful terrarium hand made of leaded glass . . . and a hanging one in the shape of a swag lamp . . . Just one of each of these, and while they're fairly expensive, they're really lovely and would make great room accents . . . Macrame hangers of all types . . . hand-made, of course . . . in which to hang your own favorite pots, and all sorts of other locally-made objects! . . . Island Florist, 745 Fort St., 385-3113.

If you wear your hair in a chignon, pin a big flower in it for evening glamour.

Unique things direct from Wales . . .

If you're like most Victorians you'll be having guests from less favored parts of the country to visit you sometime this summer . . . Seems just everybody wants to get a look at our beautiful city! . . . They'll want to see more than the scenery too, because shopping is such an integral part of happy holidaying! . . . Our suggestion is to be sure to take your guests to the Welsh Hand Loom in Nootka Court . . . It's such a unique little shop . . . With a unique type of delightful clothes and artifacts you'll find at precious few other places this side of Wales! . . . Right now, they have a terrific selection of capes . . . Long capes, short capes . . . and a couple of new ones with hoods . . . in black and white tapestry . . . We really flipped over these! Price for the hooded capes is but $95 . . . others all have lower price tags . . . And you just ought to see the beautiful colors! The Welsh blend their shades with real finesse . . . in doublewoven, pure wool tapestry, that's as warm and cozy as it's beautiful to look at . . . So many new things since we were last in the Welsh Hand Loom that we can't begin to list them all . . . Will just tell you that there are some new types of hats and caps . . . a floppy artist-style beret, a Dutch boy style, and a regular visored cap . . . Handbags match many of these, and make very smart twosomes . . . Kit with a tapestry skirt length and dyed-to-match yarn for a knit-your-own sweater seemed to us an excellent buy at $29.50 . . . If it's a pantcoat you want, there are about 18 patterns to choose from . . . And we'll leave you . . . and your guests . . . to discover all the smaller things that would make terrific gifts to carry back home! . . . Welsh Hand Loom, Nootka Court, 634 Humboldt St., 384-7723.

Registered fitters of Camp scientific supports . . .

We've told you in the past about the various orthotic supports, breast forms, support hose, etc., made by S. H. Camp and Company . . . world's largest maker of surgical supports . . . and sold in our city by the Surgical Supplies Ltd., division of McGill & Orme . . . No question about it . . . Camp is the best in its field, and Surgical Supplies is the store which has the most comprehensive supply of Camp garments . . . But even these scientifically correct garments can't do the job they're meant to do if the people who fit them don't have top-notch training! So today we want you to know about Surgical Supplies' staff of registered Camp fitters. Each one of them . . . Mrs. Mary Russell, Mrs. Susan Koniczek, Miss Patsy Frederick . . . and Messrs. Ralph Storey and John Aksey, the male fitters . . . is A Registered Camp Fitter . . . Each has taken an intensive five-day instruction course in the fitting of orthotic supports conducted by Camp's educational staff, where special attention is given to basic anatomy to be considered in the practical applications of supports . . . From the point of view of doctors, this thorough grounding in basic knowledge, practical fitting techniques and professional attitudes assures the precise and conscientious filling of prescriptions . . . From your point of view, "problem" figures, and those of you seeking the most in comfort and well-being, the expert training means new standards of professional service by a registered Camp fitter . . . So if your doctor prescribes a Camp support, head for . . . Surgical Supplies Ltd., 1012 Broad St., 384-7196.

Welch Medical Report

There are few more frightening experiences than suddenly to lose your balance, to find the walls spinning around you and the floor coming up to bash you in the face.

If at the same time you are overwhelmed by a wave of nausea, you would have to be a chronic optimist to persuade yourself that something terrible is not going on.

Fortunately, what is happening is rarely the catastrophe it seems to be. More than 85 per cent of such "dizzy" spells take their origin in a transient disorder of the balancing apparatus in the inner ear. Only about 15 per cent of such episodes are due to some trouble in the brain or the nerves that run from the ears to the brain.

Such attacks are not — properly speaking — "dizzy" spells or attacks of lightheadednesss. They are true "vertigo," which means that there is a loss of an accurate perception of one's orientation in space, very much like the sensation that children produce when they turn rapidly in a tight circle and stop abruptly in a joyful delirium of staggering and imbalance.

Deep in the middle ear are situated the so-called semicircular canals, also called labyrinths, which, like a series of self-adjusting carpenter's levels, connect with the nervous system and synchronize with the eyes to make possible man5s miraculous capacity to stay upright, to balance himself and even to perform such complex prodigies of controlled mobility as walking a tightrope or dancing a ballet.

Trouble in the inner ear, with loss of balance, overwhelming nausea and sometimes partial deafness or roaring in the ear, can be caused by a multitude of disorders, but more often than not, it can be relieved by clearing up an infection in the upper respiratory tract, or removing a plug of wax from the canal leading to ear drum.

It is sometimes due to motion sickness or abrupt changes in the atmospheric pressure. It may come on as a result of to much alcohol, the side effect of certain antibiotics or sedatives.

Anemia, in which there is a low blood count due to lack of hemoglobin, the essential oxygen-carrying ingredient in the red blood cells, can sometimes cause a feeling of faintness, but rarely true vertigo.

Blood pressure which drops abruptly in the upright position can also cause a feeling of faintness.

A common complaint of those who experience true vertigo is that an attack may come on with sudden motion of the head to one side or up or down. Often, they learn to prevent attacks by the simple device of avoiding sudden changes in the position of the head.

There are helpful remedies for warding off and clearing up vertigo and nausea. Dramine, the well known seasickness pill, or its cousin, bonine, often taken together with nicotinic acid, can make life bearable through an acute attack caused by a disordered labyrinth.

The Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

Dear Dr. Miller: Samson and Delilah have been married for two years now, but I've got to admit that when a friend asked me if pigeons mated for life, I didn't know the answer. Do they? — Y.B.

Dear Y.B.: As with some other species, pigeons may (often do) mate for life. But then again, they often don't. If separated from each other, the mates don't mourn long before finding a replacement. For that matter, even when together, the pair isn't so secure but that by fair means or fowl a third mature pigeon can't mess up their relationship.

Dear Dr. Miller: I know dogs can have epilepsy. Ours did. But did you say cats can too?—R.M.

Dear R.M.: Yes, causes of epilepsy in cats range from diseases such as toxoplasmosis, infectious feline peritonitis, and tumors, to vitamin B1 deficiency. Some recurring seizures in cats, such as those caused by vitamin deficiencies, respond readily and completely to treatment. But some do not.

A large third category may be satisfactorily controlled for long periods of time with anticonvulsant drugs, though the margin between a satisfactory or seizure-controlling drug level and a toxic overdose level may be a fine line. Constant monitoring of therapeutic drug levels is necessary.

Dear Dr. Miller: Sometimes I have to cut out a little patch of hair on my dog because it's matted or got gum or tar on it or something. How do you handle scissors so you don't stab the animal with the points if it should jump while you're trying to cut the hair? —G.G.

Dear G.G.: If you hold the blades of the scissors parallel to the skin in the area in which you're working, and if the animal should jump toward you, the long blade, not the point of the scissor, will hit the skin. Blunt-point scissors are available which are safer for the casual user.

Dr. Dr. Miller: I found Slimy, my pet snail, right next to a little pond of water. It's been doing pretty well, I think, considering, but I just found out something which worries me. Some snails like to live in ponds and some snails don't. How do I know which one Slimy is?—B.K.

Dear B.K.: The simplest way to tell is the tentacles. Freshwater snails have only two tentacles. Land snails have four.

Dear Dd. Miller: I have a gerbil commune. Lately I've noticed some of my pets have bare spots at the base of their tails. Could this be some kind of skin disease that they could pass to each other, or even to me?—W.M.

Dear W.M.: It could be. Most likely, though, these tail-based bare spots are badges of battle. Odds are your commune is crowded. As is common with many other species, too, when there are too many gerbils for the available space, fighting is a frequent consequence. The cure? A larger commune.

Dear Dr. Miller: Already this year I've seen a dog locked in a hot car, panting his lungs out trying to get enough air. It's time, past time even, when you should be warning people about hot cars and pets in them.—T.N.

Dear T.N.: The hot car hazard we're considering here is your own. The pet left locked inside is your own, too. It's criminally negligent, or should be, to care so little for your own animal that you don't consider its comfort, safety and very life.

It may be simpler for you to park your car in the most convenient place, ignoring the blazing sun overhead, or in shade which will be gone long before you return. It's thoughtless—more, it's inhumane—to simply leave that dog or cat within the car with the window open a crack for "air."

Exposed to direct sunshine, the inside of the car becomes uncomfortable in minutes, unbearable for some animals in a few minutes more. Since a car will quickly overheat even with all the windows "cracked" for air, you must park the car in a place that's cool and will remain cool. If you're not prepared to spend the time finding such a place for the vehicle, then don't take your animal with you in the car.

Countless animals could be saved yearly from the agony of heat exhaustion and death if their owners had simply considered the problem before leaving home. Even though your pet loves to travel, it's much better off left at home where it can comfortably survive rather than find itself in a parked car where it may perish in the stifling heat.

Dear Dr. Miller: What's the incubation period for the stinkpot?—W.A.

Dear W.A.: The eggs of the common musk turtle, or stinkpot, have an incubation period of 60 to 90 days, varying in relation to humidity and, especially, temperature.

KING-SIZED thirst is quenched with the help of a garden hose wielded by Clyde Brothers Circus worker Wade Burck at Windsor, Ont. Elephants sweltered with humans in 31-degree C. heat.

Helpful Husband Drives Wife Nuts

DEAR ABBY: I must have the most attentive husband in the world.

He retired last year at 64, and has been with me seven days a week, 24 hours a day ever since.

He drives me to the grocery store. He drives me to the beauty parlor — and waits to drive me home.

He drives me to the doctor's and dentist's when necessary. He drives me to my bridge club and comes back to drive me home.

Yes, I know how to drive, but his excuse is, "Something may happen to the car."

He is driving me nuts!—DRIVEN IN DAYTONA

DEAR DRIVEN: Your man needs a hobby. Has he ever tried driving a golf ball?

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I disagree on the following: We have six children ranging in age from 8 to 18, and our method of punishment is to "ground" them for a certain length of time. This means that they are not permitted to participate in any outside activity, which includes scout meetings, babysitting jobs, parties — everything except going to school and church.

I feel that if they have already given their word either to participate in some group activity or to babysit, they should be allowed to do so. My husband feels that if they are grounded, they should forego all commitments and activities, and phone to say that they cannot participate because they are being punished.

How do you feel about this, and why?—PARENTS

DEAR PARENTS: Children who are being "grounded" should not be allowed to go to parties just because they accepted the invitation.

However, I would not insist that a baby-sitting job be cancelled. For the scout meeting, I'd flip a coin because while it builds character, it's also fun.

DEAR ABBY: Tell "Decent in D.C." I know exactly how she feels. I, too, am 23, and have been on my own since I was 18.

I was a secretary up until about a year ago. I then discovered I could make more money being a cocktail waitress.

I hadn't given much thought to people's attitudes toward cocktail waitresses, but I soon discovered that most men seemed to assume that because I was a cocktail waitress, I was automatically on the make.

My mother would like to think that my job is just temporary, something to tide me over until I find a nice, "decent" job in an office.

It's true that some cocktail waitresses aren't exactly of the best moral fibre, but that can be the case in any occupation. I know quite a few cocktail waitresses, and I can tell you that most of them are decent working girls — some of whom have husbands and children — who are simply trying to make the best living they can.

In spite of these attitudes, I don't plan to give up my job. I make good money, have pleasant working conditions and none of the pressures of the "business world." And you're right, Abby, a person lends dignity to the job, not vice versa, as my customers have found out —HAPPY IN HOUSTON

DEAR HAPPY: I'll drink to that. (And make mine a Shirley Temple.)

At the beginning of this century papermaking in Canda was still a fairly small industry which mainly served the domestic market. Today, the export of pulp, paper and paperboard accounts for about one-ninth of Canada's total exports.

The illustrated 20-page booklet From Watershed to Watermark is a reference book on the Canadian pulp and paper industry, its history and place in the economy.

For example, Canada has become the world's largest exporter of wood pulp, which is the raw material for the production of paper and paperboard. It is also the basic element in rayon, explosives, photofilm and other products with a cellulose base.

It is fascinating to think that 40 per cent of the world's newspapers are printed on Canadian newsprint.

Everyday enough pulp, paper and paperboard is produced in Canada to fill a thousand freight cars. Fortunately, the principal raw material for paper making is a renewable natural resource. Generally, a new crop is ready for cutting every 60 to 100 years, depending on the species and growing area.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

NOTICE TO ALL VISUAL ARTISTS

The Honourable W. T. Hartley, Minister of Public Works, hereby gives notice that the specifications for open competitions for Artworks to be placed in the B.C. Building, Vancouver, will be announced during the year. The competitions will be in the following disciplines: Sculpture, Ceramics, Tapestry (Fabric Art), Stained Glass and Design.

Artists who are not already registered at the office of the Provincial Co-ordinator of Art, Department of Public Works, Parliament Buildings, Victoria, B.C., and who would like to have the opportunity to participate in this project, should forward slides or photographs of work, plus a resume of experience, to the above address as soon as possible, and preferably before June 15, 1975.

Greenpeace Troupe Spreads Word

DISSATISFACTION with Vancouver fish packers forced Capt. Frank Jensen (left) to sell his 12,000-pound catch of sole, cod and other bottom fish single-handedly. Jensen says packers will not buy the fish his boat is designed to catch and will only meet expenses on the sale. Jensen's prices are 50 to 60 cents a pound.

A three-men Greenpeace Foundation troupe is in town "raising consciousness and dollars on behalf of the whale," as they put it.

The Vancouver-based group has an hour-long presentation which they give to school groups, environmental groups, and service clubs to spread the word about the evils of whaling.

Main feature of the presentation is a 25-minute audio-visual slide show on whales prepared by the San Francisco Oceanic Society.

Following the slide show and group discussion, the Greenpeacers bring out their wares—Greenpeace lottery tickets, $2; and Greenpeace bumper stickers, temporarily sold out.

Spokesman Barry Lavender, a graphic artist now devoting himself full-time to Greenpeace, said money raised goes to finance Project Ahab, a sea-going expedition now underway to try to halt Russian and Japanese whaling.

Lavender, Druid (no surname) and Gib Monks gave their presentation Thursday at Spectrum community school, and were to appear Friday at Victoria high school.

They will speak tonight (Saturday at 8 p.m. at the Unitarian Church, 106 Superior.

The group had hoped to speak to many more local groups—they're used to talking to as many as four schools in one day in Vancouver, Lavender said.

The group will spend part of its visit "just media-izing ourselves", he said—visiting newspapers and radio stations to get press coverage.

During the school visits the Greenpeace workers recruit students to help sell ickets on the lottery. For a $2 ticket people get a chance to win a five-acre chunk of untouched wooded farmland near east Fort Langley, which was donated to Greenpeace by Henry Payne.

Draw on the lottery will be Sept. 1.

Lavender said the buttons and bumper stickers sell best with the young people, while the lottery tickets have greater appeal for their parents.

The three-man group is in its second week of a province-wide tour, and plans to head for the Okanagan next.

Aim of all the talking and selling is to get governments to establish a 10-year moratorium on the killing of whales.

To do that Greenpeace must attract world press attention, and Project Ahab is doing just that, Lavender said.

The project involves two boats, the 80-foot Greenpeace V and the 36-foot Greenpeace III, which sailed from Vancouver's Jericho Beach in late April to find and intercept whaling fleets.

Victoria's small Greenpeace group is going to try to raise $10,000 through lottery ticket sales this summer, spokesman Marinus Lutz said.

The Victoria branch of Greenpeace will hold a public information meeting Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Springridge Theatre, Fernwood and Gladstone.

FAREWELL TO A GIFTED PLAYER

Michigan chess recently suffered a severe loss in the passing of Leon Stolzenberg of Detroit. He died at 79, having won the state chess title often enough to be what the Russians call "absolute champion" of Michigan.

An Austrian by birth, he settled in Detroit in 1921 and was a druggist until he retired in 1955. His best score was in the 1950 U.S. Open in Detroit when he came in third. He scored 8½-3½ against a remarkably strong field. He was also an outstanding correspondence player.

He liked to play the Colle Opening, as in the following game, and to conclude with smashing sacrificial blows against the enemy King. 15.NxP and the follow-up 16.N-N5ch are very pretty.

Played in the Michigan Open, 1950.

Air Canada Disinterested In Victoria Run—Smith

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith has told the Canadian Transport Commission Air Canada apparently is not interested in serving Victoria-Vancouver airline passengers.

In a letter supporting the intervention by Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen to an application for fare hikes by both Air Canada and Pacific Western Airlines — serving the Victoria-Vancouver route — Smith said he could not understand why the commission has let Air Canada "virtually abrogate its responsibilities to serve the capital city of British Columbia," allow it to withdraw in favor of PWA, but permits it to keep a few choice interconnecting flights.

Smith complained the overall tendency of the mayor carriers is to reduce frequency of service while providing larger, more modern aircraft.

Early morning service for connecting flights at Vancouver is not good and it is impossible to get on or off Vancouver Island after 11 p.m., the mayor said.

"In the light of this continued trend toward less frequent air service, Victorians view with dismay the recent application for a further increase as a rate increase which will further discourage excursion and commuter traffic."

He said he realized operating costs have risen, but it should be remembered there was a rate hike less than a year ago.

It should also be borne in mind Air Canada holds a special place in Canadian air transportation, Smith said. The line has a public duty to serve "some of the far-flung reaches of this country."

"We should have regular and frequent air service from Victoria to Vancouver from six in the morning to after midnight each day. I would be happy to support some public subsidy towards the air fare if that was necessary," Smith said.

He told the commission's air transport committee Air Canada is "pleased to enjoy lucrative winter runs between Toronto and the Caribbean and Toronto and Europe, but it is not apparently interested in providing proper service between Vancouver and the capital city of the third largest province in this country."

Aid for Haitians Stolen: Exiles

PARIS — A Haitian exile organization has called on the world not to send aid to the Haitian government for victims of the famine which is threatening the lives of more than a quarter of a million people in the northwestern part of the Cadibbean republic.

The group, the Haitian Federation of Christian Trade Unions, which is exiled in Caracas, said any supplies or money were likely to be stolen if sent to the government of President Jean-Claude Duvalier. The aid should be sent to the international relief organizations working in Haiti who would see that it reached the victims, the group said.

Haitian Foreign Minister Edner Brutus has announced that 300,000 people are starving in the drought-stricken area, twice the number the government originally gave when it first admitted the existence of the famine last weekend. He said the regime had asked the European Common Market, West Germany, France, Spain and The Netherlands for aid for 150,000 people. The United States was already providing food for 120,000.

In its communique, the Christian Trade Union group said the famine was merely the latest and most dramatic of the "indescribable indignities" to which the Haitian people had been subjected during the Duvolier family's bloody 18-year rule.

The country has been turned into a "cruel concentration camp" in which tens of thousands of people have been executed and tortured to death and from which 1 million Haitian had been forced to flee abroad, it said.

A tooth-filing ceremony in Bali

By NEIL MORGAN

BALI (CNS) — A tooth filling on Bali is as important a community event as a high-caste bar mitzvah in Beverly Hills. Sure, it hurts. But it is a ritual that is necessary among the Hindus of Bali to qualify for eventual cremation. It takes place when a boy or girl from an important family is approaching adulthood, and the ceremony requires a round of banquets, hired musicians, extra servants and special temple offerings.

With the help of a Balinese friend I managed an invitation to a tooth filing on my last visit to Bali.

Such a crowd had gathered that we had to park four blocks away from our host's house in Denpasar.

"This is one of the richest families of Bali," my guide Komang said, as we walked through the crowd. "They are Brahman, the highest caste. It is very expensive to have a tooth filing and they consider it a compliment for you to attend."

We found ourselves in the compound of our host, Ida Bagus Kompiang, who is chief of the village and head of its largest family. It was his teenage daughter's teeth that were to be filed in the climax of the day's ceremonies. So he had invited his relatives to have their teeth filed at the same time.

In all, 19 young people were to stretch out under royal silks on pillows at the centre of the crowd and submit, wincing and tearing with pain, to the seven-inch file wielded by a Hindu priest.

The Balinese strolled from one pavilion to another within the host's compound to admire the decorations. Fruits and flowers were woven with palm leaf into offerings. Silk banners and streamers hung everywhere.

In a tree house above us, two priests were beating drums to keep out evil spirits. Near the open well another priest had built a fire to ward off rain.

"Everyone has enemies, no matter how hard he tries to live a holy life," Komang explained. "Your enemies try to make it rain on the day of your ceremonies."

A jovial little man with a Japanese camera around his neck came up and greeted us.

"Both my wife and sister are having their teeth filed," he said. "My wife is low caste so she will go first, here where you see this bed and pillows. My sister is Brahman so she will go to the priests in the temple over there."

I took a chair a few feet away from the raised floor where the filings were about to start. The first girl, who looked to be about 20, was led out by a priest.

She wore a silk gown of gold and purple. She was helped up on the high bed, called a bale. Then she lay down on silk pillows.

The priest touched a holy ruby ring to her lips and the crowd closed in to watch. He drew out a steel file about seven inches long.

Nearby a chorus of old women and children began a soft chant. The orchestra stopped. The compound was hushed as the rasping of the file against teeth began.

She took it calmly. After two minutes she was given a golden coconut in which to spit the filings, and then handed a mirror to admire the progress. (Those of higher caste spit into a silver bowl.) She lay back and the filing began again.

Ten minutes later, paler and perspiring, she was led away. She still managed a smile.

Dressed like princes with golden crowns, two Brahman boys later in the morning were less stoic. Lying under a dozen long scarves, they writhed and groaned as the file wore down their teeth. But priests and relatives held them down by arms and feet.

By now everyone was enjoying rice cake and sweet tea and the gamelan orchestra was playing.

There were still 14 more tooth filings, but we sought out our host and thanked him. It was getting to me.

Forget about time in this friendly land

By APRIL JOHNSON

PORT-AU-PRINCE (CNS) — Haiti is a nice place to visit — if you never forget it is an underdeveloped country. Actually, being underdeveloped is on the plus side of the ledger these days — the natives are still very friendly. And, in Haiti, everyone is your friend. Smile and the whole country grins back.

When you disembark from your plane at Port-au-Prince you step back in time about a hundred years, so be prepared for it. Time there has slowed down and only the roar of the airport reminds one that the 20th Century is nipping at the shores of this relaxing Caribbean country.

Customs can be tedious but isn't it all over the world? On one of my trips an inspector ignored my bulging suitcase and concentrated on my toothbrush. He took it from the case, held it to the light, shook it, dropped it on the floor and then put it back in the case and passed me on. Most extraordinary. To this day I feel he knows something I don't.

I stay at a little hotel, the Villa Creole, in Petionville above the bustling city of Port-au-Prince. It can be compared to a French country inn with tropical overtones. Small, friendly, lush flowers, superb food and an ever-smiling staff. Breakfast is buffet by the pool. Dinner is all candelight and soft lights in a room that opens onto the pool area and those superior Haitian velvet nights. It is like nowhere else.

The Villa Creole is across the street from El Rancho, a more sophisticated spot, but for me it lacks the charm I look for when on holiday. El Rancho has the swinging crowd and is a fun place to while away the evening and early morning hours.

Down in Port-au-Prince are several hotels that should be visited. One, the Royal Haitian, should be your base if you stay in the city. The much-touted L'Habitation Le-Clerc is also located here. It has much in its favor so far as decor is concerned but it lacks two major necessities — air conditioning and screens on the windows (which you need in Haiti).

You can eat up a storm in Haiti from Port-au-Prince on up the little winding roads to Petionville and even beyond. For an unforgettable lunch try Olafson's in P-au-P.

The literary group gathers here. Lunch is served on the porch of a big, rambling, a la Hemingway white house. There is no menu. Lunch is usually fresh fish prepared Haitian-style with a very hot sauce served on the side.

Olafson's has a few rooms for guests, but unless you are a true Haitian aficianado stay elsewhere for at least your first trip. After a meal at Olafson's however, you might decide you never want to stay anywhere else.

Dinner at Le Chateaubriand is a must. This restaurant is located way up a rutted winding road, but is well worth the effort of the trip once you see Port-au-Prince spread out below. Chateaubriand sort of hangs on to the side of a cliff, and the windows facing the sea and town are usually open so that you can feel the soft air as well as see the jewel-like city below. Aside from the atmosphere the food is excellent.

For a bit of change of pace, try the Green Lantern. This is another restaurant located up in the hills. Here guests sit at tables around a pool and again the atmosphere is tropical French. The food is superb, the service divine.

You can find interesting things to buy in Port-au-Prince. What guidebooks call "department stores" should bring a chuckle from most visitors. These are usually little shops with tin roofs and at times questionable entranceways. Don't be discouraged, for as underdeveloped as they may appear on the outside they are equally developed on the inside. And you will find the prices well below those in Canada.

One shop not to be overlooked in LeManoir, located in an old Victorian house on Avenue John Brown. Go there first. You will see only the best Haitian folk arts and crafts.

The Iron Market is a much-touted place for the "tourist" to see. I found it overwhelming and can only suggest that you take a guide or a Haitian friend along with you to stem the stampede of merchants who want to sell you trinkets. The name of the game here is "bargain." Any price that is quoted can be halved easily with skill and you can get it for even less.

City of tranquil peace

Heart of Japan

By JOHN PHILIP SOUSA

KYOTO (CNS) — Despite its modern overtones, this former capital city remains today what it has always been to every Japanese — Nihon no Furusato, the heart of Japan.

Here, more than any other place in this country, natives and visitors alike grasp the essence of what it means to be Japanese; this is a city where the soul of a nation comes alive.

Kyoto, a compact community whose history dates back more than 1,200 years, was the capital of Japan for 10 centuries beginning in 794 when Emperor Kanmu moved the court from nearby Nara.

Heian-kyo, it was called then — City of Tranquil Peace.

The name applies today even though skyscrapers, heavy traffic and visitors abound; despite the fact that it is the largest centre of traditional Japanese arts and crafts, and notwithstanding a population of 1.5 million which makes it Japan's fifth largest city.

That this serenity can still be savored is no doubt due to the abundance of centuries-old relics all about the place. It is said that not even a native making a special effort could adequately visit the hundreds of Buddhist temples, Shinto shrines, palaces, pagodas and other treasures to be found within Kyoto — more than 1,700 in all.

The setting helps.

The town is neatly laid out and the misty hills that surround it are almost always in view. Cherry, maple and other trees are everywhere, to say nothing of flower-bedecked gardens, quiet ponds and streams.

Long the favorite spot in Japan with foreign visitors, 300,000 of whom come here every year, Kyoto's beauty doesn't strike you on arrival. Your first glimpse of the city, in fact, is somewhat of a shock.

I arrived on one of the superexpress bullet trains that make the 310-mile trip from Tokyo in two hours and 53 minutes. The Central Station, where we glided to a noiseless stop, is a huge ultramodern affair of concrete and glass. Outside, mobs of people seemed to be going in every direction, followed by more people from Buddha knows where.

In front and all around the station are several tall hotels, department stores and other mostly new-looking structures. Cars of every type and color, red and yellow buses, and green streetcars added to the bustle.

It wasn't until the next morning that the other Kyoto started to materialize.

With such a large list of attractions to select from, I plotted my itinerary with the help of maps and guides obtained from the Japan National Tourist Organization which, incidentally, has offices in several Canadian cities.

There are a number of tours to the key sights, both by bus and private car and with or without guide.

But I did my getting around mostly on foot and by streetcar.

I got off the streetcar at the Kinkakuji-mae stop. An easy five-minute walk and I was standing in the gardens of the Kinkaku-ji Temple or, as most foreigners call it, the Golden Pavilion.

Originally built in 1397 as a luxurious villa by the ruling Ashikaga Yoshimitsu, the impressive but delicate structure stood amid its magnificent gardens until 1955, when it was destroyed by fire.

What you see today is a faithfully executed replica. The first floor is unpainted wood, the second and top floors are painted with gold over a lacquer base. Atop the shingled roof rests a phoenix.

Not far away is the Ginga-ku-ji Temple or Silver Pavilion. Erected in 1489 and so named because its original owner intended to cover it with silver foil, this was also a villa that became a temple as specified by the owner's will. The gentleman, by the way, never got around to getting all the foil on, but the name has remained. Of interest are the stone and sand formations in the garden; they were shaped to reflect the moonlight on the building.

Built in 1895 to commemorate the 1,100th anniversary of Kyoto's founding as a capital city, Heian Shrine is a vermilion-colored Shinto sanctuary.

In a country whose architectural treasures more often than not are lavishly crafted but modest in size, Kyotot's Nijo Castle is nothing but monumental. Built 372 years ago as a residence of the military regents, it is a complex of luxurious villas spread around meticulously laid-out gardens and surrounded by formidable ramparts and moats.

Kyoto is also where you will find Ryoan-ji, the famed rock and sand garden: 15 rocks on a bed of raked sand. This is a strikingly simple work of art 500 years old whose patterns and textures have as many interpretations and meanings as the site has visitors.

As do all of Japan's major cities, Kyoto offers good transportation, hotels to suit every pocketbook, a string of excellent restaurants featuring domestic and foreign dishes, a busy nightlife and easy access to a number of nearby resorts and points of interest such as Lake Biwa and Nara. Colorful festivals crowd the calendar and although the area is at its colorful best during spring and fall, it is truly a place for all seasons.

The bullet train stops here, and you'll discover a but so does time. Take a look country's past as well as its soul.

THIS IS the Golden Pavilion, or the Kinkaku-ji Temple. It was destroyed by fire in 1955, but was replaced by a faithfully executed replica. The original structure was built in 1937.

Alice at Hatfield

The life and work of Lewis Carroll, author of Alice in Wonderland, is the subject of an exhibition at Hatfield House. Carroll (whose real name was the Rev. C. L. Dodgson, 1832-1898) was a close friend of the 3rd Marquess of Salisbury, the Victorian statesman and Prime Minister, and often stayed at Hatfield.

The early 17th century house, 21 miles north of London, is now the home of the sixth Marquess. The exhibition, which will be on view throughout the summer, is being devised by the Lewis Carroll Society, and is to be staged in the newly-restored Riding School at Hatfield.

Canal centre wins trophy

Each year the British Tourist Authority awards a Come to Britain trophy for the year's outstanding tourist development with the overseas visitor in mind.

The Prince of Wales presented the trophy for 1974 to representatives of Welsh Holiday Craft Ltd. for the Canal Exhibition Centre at Llangollen, North Wales, 184 miles northwest of London.

The centre, based in a restored 19th century warehouse, illustrates the growth of canals from their introduction during the Industrial Revolution in the 18th century, to the present day.

Russia cooling off for U.S. tourist

By STAN DELAPLANE

MOSCOW — The road to Moscow is paved with good intentions. American couple I ran into in Paris had just made a trip with a camper. Said they had no difficulties except, "Intourist made our campgrounds reservation for us. But when we arrived the camp never heard of us. However, they gave us camping space."

This was all done without any Russian except for what they could pull out of a pocket phrase book. They had a map given to them by Intourist. (The big mama of tourism. There aren't any travel agents.)

Sounded like a hairy project to me. But they had supreme confidence in the U.S. passport. So maybe Russia is cooling off.

Bunch of travel writers went in a few years ago and were mostly disillusioned. No hot water in some hotels. Irritating changes of schedule issued by a girl guide who would have made a good top sergeant.

When I was in Moscow with a bunch of reporters, the hotel lifted our passports and we couldn't get them back for three days. One day they put a waste basket full of passports on the desk. Told us to help ourselves.

". . . something you wrote about renting a boat on the Thames."

There's a lot of boat rentals along the river. British Tourist Authority, 151 Bloor St. W., Toronto, M5S 1T3, will send you a list. I'd get one at Maidenhead. That's a good starting point. Power boats sleeping six are about $150 a week.

I'd keep the party at four. Those forward bunks are made for children, not for basketball players. Take a run up and down the open river until you get the feel of it before you tackle your first lock. That's a test of nerves. But after a week you're as salty as a Swedish herring.

□

"We will have a week in Athens. Can you advise how to tip?"

You give the doorman who calls your cab a few drachmas. Greeks don't tip taxi drivers. Tourists often do. He doesn't expect it, but he'll accept it.

There's a 15 per cent service charge on your restaurant check. Greeks tell me it's custom to leave 15 per cent more. Ten per cent for the waiter—leave that on the plate. Five percent for the bus boy—leave that on the table cloth.

By all means don't tip the bus boy and waiter the same! You insult the waiter and he'll hate you for it.

□

"If we box an antique vase carefully and carry it on the plane (in England) will we have to open it for customs?"

I'd bet on it. I never saw anything nailed, tied, taped that customs didn't tell them to open it.

"Is it safe to go as a tourist to Guatemala?"

I think it is. I drove all over Guatemala while politicos were shooting each other. Never saw anything of it except what I read in the papers. Pan American is the major line flying into those banana republics. Daily flights so there must be enough tourist traffic to be worthwhile.

□

"Are there things you should look out for in Hawaii? Snakes or scorpions?"

Only two snakes in Hawaii. Both are in the zoo. I did see a scorpion once. And only once in 25 years.

In low lying grass places you get a few mosquitoes. Never any "no-see-ums" that you find in the Caribbean. Major medical problem here is sunburn. No Daylight Saving in the islands. The sun rises and sets in the same pattern winter and summer. It's hotter than you think. Keep cool and shady.

Lordly manors combine

LONDON (UPI) — Seven of Britain's most lordly lords have united to promote visits to their "Magnificent seven" stately homes.

The dukes of Marlborough and Argyll, the marquesses of Bath and Tavistock, and Lords Harewood, tock, and lords Harewood, Montague and Brooke, own and live in Britain's seven stateliest and most-visited stately homes.

Once a spokesman said, "they were deadly rivals in promoting their properties to attract visitors. But they have now joined forces" for a joint plan.

The "magnificent seven," as they call their group, will offer reduced price admission to each of their ancient mansions and palaces, all occupied by the families which built them centuries ago.

"This is probably the first time that a group of such famous historic houses and castles has cooperated in promotion such as this," a spokesman said.

Sun Blamed for Thinning Ozone

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The atmosphere's ozone radiation shield has thinned slightly over most areas of the world during the past four years but two government scientists tend to blame the sun rather than spray can propellants.

The layer of ozone 15 to 30 miles high screens earth from most of the dangerous ultraviolet radiation from the sun. There has been considerable concern recently that freon-type gases used in aerosol cans are building up in the upper atmosphere, where it is believed they will destroy ozne.

depletion in the ozone will increase the incidence of radiation-caused skin cancer, reduce the productivity of food crops and change global weather patterns.

Ozone levels over most of the northern hemisphere increased during the 1960s, but Dr. James K. Angell and Julius Korshover of the National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration reported that the ozone increase stopped in 1970. And between 1970 and 1972, they said the ozone actually declined from 1 to 2 per cent over nearly all areas of the world.

In the U.S. and Great Britain, where more recent records are available, a two per cent reduction in ozone was measured although the annual rate of decrease has been slowing.

Angell and Korshover made those findings after analyzing ozone data obtained from more than 60 measuring stations around the globe.

Ozone concentrations are known to vary for some reason over two-year periods and the two government researchers said the long term trends they found "appear to be part of a confusing background of 'normal' ozone variations."

Solar activity is believed to be one natural phenomenon affecting ozone. Records dating back to the 1930s showed that peaks in ozone appeared two to three years after the maximum in sunspot activity which runs in 11-year cycles. In some areas the peaks of ozone and sunspots nearly coincide.

The last sunspot maximum was in 1969 and the two researchers suggested that the ozone decrease that began in 1970 might be related to the sun's radiation activity "rather than any man-induced effects."

Dr. Frank S. Rowland, a University of California chemistry professor who first raised the freon issue last year, said that the observations by Angell and Korshover have no bearing on the freon problem because it is estimated that spray can gases so far have destroyed only a few tenths of one per cent of the ozone.

"We're looking at the future more than we are at the present," he said in a telephone interview.

Because it takes a long time for the gases to reach the stratosphere, Rowland said it is not believed their effect on the ozone will become detectable until sometime in the 1980s. But he said the problem is that if nothing is done about the release of the gases until then, then the problem will become much worse in the years to come.

POLICE WILL BE TOLD OF CHILD BEATINGS

REGINA (CP) — The Saskatchewan social services department plans to keep police informed of suspected child-abuse cases under an agreement made following an inquest at which doctors and welfare workers were criticized for not reporting cases to the police.

The case involved a three-year-old boy who was taken to hospital at the age of two months after suffering injuries, suspected to have been the result of child battering.

The boy, who was without basic reflexes, partially blind and deaf, underweight and believed to be suffering from brain damage, was made a ward of the state soon after being taken to hospital in January, 1971. He died last August.

No law requires the social services department to report child-abuse cases to the police. The understanding in the past had been that this would be done but not all employees were aware of it, said Fred Metlewsky, co-ordinator of family services for the department.

The military government has decreed a law giving Quechua equal status with Spanish, and requiring that it be taught in all schools starting from the first grade, a government spokesman said.

Quechua, the most enduring legacy of the Inca empire which stretched half the length of South America 500 years ago, is still spoken by more than 10 million persons in Peru, Bolivia, Ecudador, Chile, Colombia and Argentina.

Bunkhouse Passing Into History

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

The closing down of a large Rayonier Canada bunkhouse at Port McNeill this year passed almost unnoticed, but it marks a growing trend of phasing out old type logging camps or communities on Vancouver Island.

Forest companies are moving into the concept of townsites and within the next decade the familiar sights of bunkhouses for single men, cottages for married couples and a common dining room shared by all, will be a thing of the past.

For many there will be no regrets, for some a sad day.

The new concept is a townsite where loggers own their own homes — businesses such as hotels, shops and garages are invited to establish themselves, and the community as a whole runs it own affairs.

One of the basic reasons for the move to townsites is economics — mounting costs to maintain a logging community, such as fuel, lighting, garbage collection, sewage treatment plants and recreation.

Another factor is that logging camps are becoming no longer necessary to improved communications. Today there are thousands of miles of logging roads on Vancouver Island, making it possible to transport men to and from a working site and town.

Twenty years ago many logging operations were isolated and only accessible by water and aircraft.

But logging camps have their advantage. If you want to save money or pay up your debts, it's the best place to be — providing of course you can adjust yourself to environment. For some it isn't easy and accounts for the large turnover of loggers in forest communities.

Even a well-operated logging community as the Rayonier Canada settlement at Holberg with the largest bunkhouse complex in the province, its turnover of employees of 250 per cent a year. In some camps its more.

Holberg is situated about 40 miles west of Port Hardy at the head of a 20-mile long inlet which bears the same name, in the northern sector of the island. It was once the site of the largest floating logging camp in B.C., and marked the starts of a trail used by Cape Scott settlers at the turn of the century.

The community has a recreational hall where employees can participate in indoor activities, such as badminton — a playing field and a recreational officer to assist in organizing sports and hobby clubs.

In addition, the recreational facilities of the Holberg Armed Forces base a few miles away, are available to the men. This includes a swimming pool.

A neighborhood pub will also be in operation at the logging centre this summer.

But despite these facilities men come and go.

Single men life in a bunkhouse complex of accommodating 200 loggers. Each have indivudual rooms which are serviced. They pay $2.50 for bed and board. Depending on their jobs, the can save between $150 to $330 a week after income tax and board has been deducted.

This is a far cry from the logging camps of 20 years ago when singled and married men were herded in a single dormitary heated by a stove at one end — a life style which was far from satisfactory.

The company has 50 houses for married couples with rents ranging between $40 and $80 a month — all services included — light, heat, water and garbage collection. For trailers the charge is $20 a pad.

Men eat in a common dining room where sumptuous meals are served and which few households could afford or would have the time or energy to prepare. They include the best cuts of meats, cassoroles of all kinds, salads and a wide assortment of pastries.

The atmosphere is free and easy — not like it was in former days when the cook stood up and did not allow the men to talk.

These services all amount to hefty bills. There are other expenses, such as a sewage disposal plant which cost $150,000 to install.

But for division manager Fred Mantic, it will be a happy day when the logging community folds up and the men live in an independent town at Holberg, but this may not come for a few years yet.

Mantic's reasons for wanting a townsite is mainly social.

"Life in a logging camp is unnatural," he said. "The men work hard. They are up early in the morning and work in all sorts of weather — cold, rain, sleet and under a hot sun. What have they got to return to?

"They are a closed comunity — they see only their own kind," he added. They have no female companions to help them iron out their frustrations. Many are lonely."

Mantic said when a dance is held the married couples sit on one side of the room and the single men at the other.

"This is no way for people to love," he said. "Would you have your son spend his earning years in a logging camp."

Mantic should know. Every law breaking offence or domestic problem ends up on his doorstep.

Sex, he admits, is sometimes a problem as there are only a few women working in the community. Now and then a prostitute invades the premises without the knowledge of management.

Some men would like their girl friends to live with them, but he points out this isn't practical.

"What would the women do," he said. "There is nothing for them to do here."

What about the benefits of a logging camp — such as good food and the opportunity to save money?

"Alright, if we must have subsidized rooms for single men and a dining room in a townsite, lets have them," he replied. "But lets get away from logging camps. It's not a natural way to live."

"Let's have a town where loggers can meet people other than their own kind — where they can take their clothes to a laundrymat and obtain a variety of services — where female companionship is available," he added.

Back in the bunkhouse, Ron Johnson of Chilliwack agreed that he would prefer living in a townsite.

"But a logging camp is a good place to save money providing you can discipline yourself," he added.

Randy Schnider of Power River, said he missed his family and close friends.

"I have been to other logging camps," he said. "This is one of the best. The last place I was at, the bunkhouse was too dirty. I left in three days.

The advantage of living in a camp is the money," he went on. "But I think I would miss the camp. I get up fresh in the morning. In a townsite I would be tempted to stay up late."

There were others who said they preferred camp living to townsite, but like Schnider and Johnson they did not intend to stay longer than nine months at Holberg. Some planned to leave earlier. It was obvious that logging communities are not places people get attached to.

What do the young unmarried loggers do when they leave the logging camp?

Well, some buy cars and travel about the country. Others gamble their money away and back they come.

Mantic appears to be right. People need a stake in life — a goal to work for — some responsibility other than only making money.

By MICHAEL SATCHELL
Washington Star

WASHINGTON — It is April, 1964. Three women are sitting in a cafe in Tel Aviv, sipping espresso and reminiscing about their wartime experiences as inmates of the Majdanek Concentration Camp in Poland.

Their conversation, like their coffee, is dark and bitter. They talk of the death and suffering they remember, and of faces they will never forget, of those who were hanged, gassed or tortured to death and of those who were responsible.

"Did you know Hermine Braunsteiner?" asks one of the women recalling an S.S. supervisor in the camp who selected hundreds of Jewish adults and children for execution, and who took a special delight in terrorizing inmates with a whip. "I wonder what ever happened to her. I wonder where that mamzer is today?"

At a nearby table, a tired looking man, balding with an ink smudge moustache and mailpouch eyes, is intent on his meal when one of the women suddenly recognizes him. "Look," she whispers. "It's Simon Wiesenthal. Let's ask him about Braunsteiner. Maybe he knows."

Wiesentahl had never heard of Hermine Braunsteiner but the famed hunter of Nazi war criminals promised that when he returned to his Vienna headquarters, her name would be added to the list of those to be searched out and held accountable.

From the chance meeting that day 11 years ago, a sequence of events was set in motion that have spanned the years and miles to America in 1975, reviving memories of the Holocaust, reawakening the ghosts of its victims, and haunting the placid lives of dozens of alleged war criminals who have been living undisturbed in the United States for close to three decades.

Hermine Braunsteiner, described at her trial as "the second cruelest guard" in the camp where 1.3 million died, the pitiless Braunsteiner who beat a woman prisoner to death and who helped herd up to 1,000 victims at a time to their slaughter, was living anonymously as a housewife in the Queens area of New York City when Wiesenthal tracked her down.

Last year, after a long and tedious legal battle, she was extradited to West Germany. She is now imprisoned in Dusseldorf awaiting trial on war crimes charges.

She was only one of a large number of suspected war criminals living in the United States. The Immigration Service currently has an active list of 45 suspected war criminals living here. The files, stark in their cold summation of accusations of crimes of staggering dimension, include:

—Andrija Artukovic, the wartime Interior Minister of the Croatian puppet state, accused of ordering the deaths of 600,000 Jews, Serbs and Gypsies and by some accounts, scores of downed American pilots. For 21 years, Artúkovic has been under a U.S. deporation order for his wartime activities but he remains comfortable and secluded in an expensive beachfront apartment compound in Surfside, Calif.

—Vladimir Osidach, a police chief from Galicia, Poland, said in Immigration Service documents to be "responsible for sending 14,000 Jews from Rawa-Ruska to the Blezec death camp in 1942." Osidach has been an American citizen since 1963. He lives in Philadelphia.

—Karl Linnas, sentenced to death by the Soviets in 1962 on charge, of being the head of the concentration camp in Tartu, Estonia where 12,000 died. Linnas is a factory worker and pasted on the Nova parked in the driveway of his Greenlawn, N.Y., home is a bumper sticker that warns: "I BRAKE FOR ANIMALS."

—Valerian Trifa, accused of being one of the principal leaders of the Rumanian Fascist organization known as the Iron Guard, and listed in Immigration Service files as being an "anti-Semitic agitator involved in the murder of 6,000 to 10,000 Jews. Trifa today is a Bishop of the Rumanian Orthodox Episcopate of America and lives in a 25-room mansion on a 200 acre farm at Grass Lake, Mich. west of Detroit.

Although 45 individuals are under active investigation by the Immigration Service, estimates of the total numbers of war criminals who have found haven in America range from a hundred to more than 1,000.

GE Recalls 'Leaking' Microwaves

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The General Electric Co. has agreed to repair 5,300 microwave ovens which leak excessive amounts of radiation, the United States Food and Drug Administration FDA said Friday.

It will be the first major corrective program involving home microwave ovens in the U.S. since the federal government set standards for the units more than three years ago.

The FDA said the ovens in question were found to be leaking as much as 10 times the limit on microwave emissions set by the government.

TV Hasn't Turned On South Africa

JOHANNESBURG (Reuter) — South Africans are showing an embarrassing resistance to being turned into a nation of television watchers.

Embarrassing, that is, for the country's home-grown television industry and for the government which has carefully planned every step of its belated debut.

At the moment, South Africa is the only developed country in the world without television. Until 1971, the government opposed it as a threat to public morals and a waste of money.

Now, seven months away from what is supposed to be the great TV switch-on, the television industry is in a state approaching panic.

Shops and warehouses are choked with unsold television sets. One estimate is that only about 4,000 sets have been sold and that earlier estimates of 400,000 sales by next January are wishful thinking.

The main reason is cost. Most of the sets are large, color models. The 25½-inch screen version retails at between $1,520 and $1,610.

Television rentals are also relatively higher here.

From the beginning it decided virtually to shut out foreign exporters by setting up a national industry, limited to six manufacturers. These were given preferential treatment, while imports were limited and subject to hefty duty.

Starting a TV manufacturing industry from scratch is costly. Coupled with the government's decision to allow retailers a 50-per-cent markup it has resulted in what many people regard as prohibitive prices.

As the Johannesburg Sunday Express put it recently: "Having waited so long for it in the face of a ridiculous government ban, it is hard for South Africans to swallow that they now are going to get the most expensive television sets in the world . . . on which to watch the shortest TV service in the world."

The government plans to confine program time initially to four hours a night, two hours in English and two hours in Afrikaans, with the languages taking it in turn for "first go" on alternate nights.

Thus far, there are only tentative plans for services in the African languages. But with sets at current prices there are not likely to be many African viewers.

Now all he needs is the money for the annual licence fee (about $55) and for gasoline to drive the generator.

Pre-Fabs to House Seedlings

DUNCAN — Time, costs and space will be saved if a new concept in nursery greenhouses now being used by the B.C. Forest Service proves successful.

Twenty of the greenhouses are being pre-fabricated at the forest service's nursery at Duncan; three have been established there and the remainder will go to other seedling production centres throughout the province.

The structures are each 200 feet long and 30 feet wide, are of wooden frame construction and covered with strong sheets of clear plastic. The cost of each is approximately $3,000; and, if necessary, they can be dismantled fairly quickly and moved.

Within the plastic greenhouses the forest service is growing seedlings in what they call styrofoam containers — lightweight units with individual holes in which the seeds are planted. The container looks something like a large and deep egg carton.

Each of the greenhouses can accommodate up to 500,000 container seedlings, reports Duncan nursery superintendent Neil Marshall. The same area in an open field (where bare root stock is grown) would produce only about 75,000 infant trees.

Officials of the reforestation division say the container — grown seedlings are much easier to grow and control than the "bare root" trees grown in open fields; and that the actual planting of such seedlings is fast and efficient.

They point out that a good planter can plant between 600 to 700 "bare root" seedlings in a day, whereas the same person can plant up to 1,500 of the container-grown stock in the same time.

The styrofoam blocks are provided by a commercial plastic firm in Edmonton and they each cost between $2 and $2.50, depending on the size. The containers have cavities ranging from two to eight cubic inches.

The infant trees are removed from the styrofoam blocks before being stored or shipped to reforestation projects, and the blocks can be used several times over.

In the "egg carton" blocks the seedlings grow in a carefully prepared mixture of peat moss, vermiculite and lime.

So far, the Duncan nursery superintendent reports, results have been excellent.

Yet to be proven is the plastic greenhouse's resistance to high winds and snow. During winter months the units will be heated by special furnaces, and it's hoped this will prevent accumulations of potentially dangerous snow.

Work, Learning Blend in China

In Peking the government tries to control the growth of grass because it believes grass will cause the spread of insects.

The workers whose job it is to pull out the grass are primary school children.

That's one of the many things that Greater Victoria School District superintendent Jake Longmore observed on his three-week tour of the People's Republic of China.

Longmore returned Wednesday from the trip, which was arranged by the University of B.C. centre for continuing education for 22 Canadian educators.

Everywhere in China he noticed a mingling of the world of work and the world of education, Longmore said in an interview Friday.

From the age of three, children learn they must work and make their contribution to the state, he said.

So in Peking kindergarten children have planted 3.5 million trees throughout the city, he said.

When these trees are fully grown some will be used for lumber and others planted in their stead.

In Shanghai Longmore and the Canadian group visited a factory where women were producing flashbulgs.

Part of each lightbulb was an intricately folded piece of cardboard, and these bits of cardboard were folded by children.

The children were making their contribution, said Longmore, but they were also getting good practice in manipulative skills.

Canadian children get the same practice by making paper airplanes and things in classrooms, he said.

Everywhere this mixing of work and education is evident.

Larger factories and communes are responsible for education up to the junior-middle school level.

Some factories have technical schools attached to them where young people, workers and peasants can train. Usually they are trained to one specific task, not trained in general fields, Longmore said.

At Peking University, the national university, the emphasis is on applied research into new techniques and processes that will help the state, he said.

Longmore said there are 10 times as many people in school today in China than 10 years ago.

Classes are large, anywhere from 42 to 56 students, and teaching is mainly by rote, he said.

There is a terrific emphasis on the cultural side of education, he said.

Certain primary schools are designated to give special emphasis to drama and music. Then there are special middle schools where students who have shown some talent take all the regular courses, but get special studies in music or art as well.

The best of these will be sent to the art college, and the top art college students will eventually be performers in such things as the Peking Opera.

Last Ships In Suez Set Free

CAIRO (UPI) — The last two ships trapped eight years in the Suez Canal arrived in Port Said today, leaving behind a clean and clear navigational channel for the reopening celebrations next Thursday, the canal authority said.

An authority spokesman said the British freighters Scottish Star and Port Invercargill, both about 10,000 tons, sailed the 60 miles from the Great Bitter Lake to freedom under tow.

"We are all very happy now," the spokesman said. "This means the channel is free of all obstacles, all mines, all wrecks and we can look forward to next month's opening."

Between now and June 5, canal personnel will continue to train pilots and work out any last-minute problems, the spokesman said. But removal of the last ships means the Suez Canal is virtually ready for commercial shipping.

The British ships were among 15 vessels caught in canal waters when the 1967 Middle East War broke out. One freighter, the American-owned African Glen, was sunk in the October, 1973, war, but the other 14 have left since May 7.

Degrees Phoney

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Eighty-four holders of fake university degrees have been dismissed from teaching posts, officials said Friday. The fake sheepskins included diplomas for five-year courses in medicine, they said.

Munro Named on Tape

HAMILTON (CP) — A tape recording obtained by a police wiretap in April, 1974, was played in court Friday and revealed that Kenneth Elliott made reference to federal Labor Minister John Munro during a telephone conversation with Horace Rindress.

The tape was played while Rindress, a former dredging company president, was testifying for the Crown in the case against Elliott, 42, a former Hamilton harbor commissioner, and local businessman Reginald Fisher, 62, in Ontario Supreme Court on 10 charges of conspiracy, fraud and uttering.

The charges were laid in connection with alleged kickbacks and payoffs in dredging and construction projects in Hamilton harbor between 1970-72.

Rindress said he co-operated with the police during the telephone call to Elliott in return for a pledge that no charges would be laid against him.

On the tape, the witness asked Elliott if he had any "political clout."

"Not a thing, Joe," Elliott answered.

Later in the taped conversation, Elliott added: "The way I busted my ass for those politicians, the money I've gotten them over the years. Now they all go run and hide, including Munro."

Munro, MP for Hamilton East, is listed as a witness in the indictment, but has not yet been called.

"I don't think anybody is going to be charged unless someone starts talking," Elliott said on the tape.

On the tape, the two men made references to money, with Elliott saying that J. P. Porter Co. Ltd. is "going to have to come up with the tax on those three big ones."

The witness, former president of J. P. Porter, said he believed the "three big ones" was a loose reference to $318,000, which he said earlier was laundered through a fictitious company by Elliott.

Rindress has testified to a series of kickbacks and payoffs involving Elliott an da number of dredging companies.

The witness also said Elliott told him that a kickback on a J. P. Porter dredging contract, which eventually totalled $180,000, was ultimately divided among Elliott and the other two members of the three-man harbor commission.

CBC HEAD TO QUIT

OTTAWA (CP) — Laurant Picard today confirmed reports that he will step down as president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. Aug. 1 to head Marine Industries Ltd.

Marine Industries is one of the 13 companies charged with conspiracy in the Hamilton Harbor dredging scandal, and in a telephone interview with the Journal from his Montreal home Picard expressed concern that his name has already been associated with the scandal in reports of his resignation.

But he added, the firm's dredging operation was sold a few months after the alleged collusion in 1971.

The CBC president said he is leaving his post because of "an exciting offer" from Marine Industries but addded that "nobody can leave the CBC without regrets."

He said he hopes he is leaving the corporation with more confidence in itself.

"Seven years ago it was in a state of crisis. People didn't believe in it . . . even some insiders. Now it's starting to believe in itself again."

Johnson, who has no previous broadcasting experience, has only one month to learn from the retiring president about the mammoth CBC operation.

Picard plans to vacation during July but said "we will be discussing it as often as we can" before the end of June.

Picard, CBC president since 1972, said he already has handed his resignation to the federal cabinet. The matter will receive cabinet consideration after Prime Minister Trudeau returns from Europe.

As a result of strike action by our employees, who are members of the Office & Technical Employees Union, the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia is unable to provide normal claim service. However, the Management of the Corporation will endeavour to provide emergency service to those motorists who are involved in an accident causing severe financial hardship through death, injury or loss of a car through damage, fire or theft. The Corporation's supervisory personnel are available to deal with these special problems at telephone number 665-2800 Vancouver. The public is urged to use this number for essential hardship cases only.

IF YOU HAVE AN ACCIDENT...

The majority of auto body shops throughout the Province are co-operating during the strike by the O.T.E.U. These body shops are making repairs to vehicles and charging the owner only the deductible portion of his insurance. These co-operating shops are being paid the balance by the Corporation, based on previously agreed rates, and have agreed not to surcharge the public.

The Corporation urges motorists to make certain they are dealing with co-operating shops in order to avoid being surcharged. Do not pay more than the deductible amount of your insurance. If you are not responsible in any way for the accident, you will be reimbursed entirely for this deductible amount by the Insurance Corporation after the strike.

If you are involved in an accident and must have repairs made, take your vehicle to one of the co-operating shops. If the vehicle cannot be legally and safely driven, have it towed. Advance estimates from more than one body shop are not required. If there is any question that the repair cost may exceed the value of the vehicle, please telephone 665-2800 Vancouver for instructions on how to proceed.

If you do not have collision insurance, you will be responsible for the total repair cost. If another car is involved, all details should be recorded and the Corporation contacted after the strike.

If your vehicle can be safely and legally driven, and it is not essential to have it repaired right away, there is no need to immediately report your claim to the Corporation. When the strike is settled, the Corporation will advise you how to handle your claim.

If your car is stolen, the police should be notified immediately. There is an automatic provision for the rental of another vehicle, excluding the first 72 hours, at the rate of $10.00 per day for 20 days, in the case of theft. However, during this emergency service if you rent a car you will be responsible for payment of this amount. Validity of the claim will be established after the strike is settled and you will be reimbursed where appropriate.

If someone is injured in an accident the law requires that the police be notified and given all details. The Corporation will investigate the situation completely after the strike is settled.

The Management of the Corporation regrets this inconvenience and disruption of normal service and urges all motorists to drive with particular care at this time.

Guide Dog Trips Man, Fall Restores Sight

"I am absolutely thrilled," said Jon Lawrence, 43, a telephone operator at Maidstone, southeast of London. He said he began going blind seven years ago from complications of a slow-developing eye ailment and arthritis and had been completely blind for four years.

"I had just taken a cup of tea up to my wife and daughter," he told reporters Friday. "Omar, my guide dog, was leaping about at the bottom of the stairs and I tripped over him, fell down three or four steps and landed with a bump, banging the back of my head.

"My daughter Janette rushed down and I asked her if she was wearing a pink nightie. She was."

"When I fell I cursed the dog," Lawrence said. "'You horrible hound,' I yelled at him. But he gave me back my sight."

Omar will have to be returned to the organization that trains guide dogs for the blind.

"I'll be sorry," Lawrence said. "He's a wonderful dog." He got a steak as a bonus.

The colorful and controversial Prefontaine, 24, was alone in his convertible Friday when it veered over the center line of a Eugene street, jumped a curb, smashed into a stone embankment and flipped over, pinning him beneath the vehicle.

LONDON — Stuntman Evel Knievel had a visit in hospital Friday from film actress Ann-Margret who told him America wants him to carry on jumping.

The actress paid the get-well visit in return for a special trip Knievel made to Las Vegas for the comeback show after her recovery from serious injuries suffered in a 22-foot fall on stage.

PETERBOROUGH, Ont. — David Lewis said Friday he is stepping down, but he is not stepping out.

"I wouldn't be permitted to retire even if I wanted to," the federal NDP leader told a crowd of 400 gathered to honor members of the Lewis political family.

Lewis, 69, who lost his seat in parliament in the 1974 general election, said he will retire from the party leadership but will continue to write, speak and work for the party.

"I will work for the NDP until I physically can no longer do so," he said.

MONTREAL — Dr. Henry Morgentaler was taken to a Montreal hospital Tuesday, apparently suffering a heart attack, two days after his trial began on charges of having performed an illegal abortion, his lawyer revealed Friday.

Claude-Armand Sheppard said the 52-year-old doctor complained he had pains in his chest and was feeling dizzy. He was examined at the emergency ward and was returned to the Parthenais detention centre Tuesday night.

DUBLIN — English heiress Dr. Rose Dugdale has ended her 34-day hunger strike in Limerick Jail, prison officials said Friday.

Dr. Dugdale, daughter of an English millionaire, is serving a nine-year sentence in connection with last year's $20 million art theft from diamond millionaire Sir Alfred Beit. She went on the hunger strike in protest against alleged withholding of her mail.

NEW YORK — An Alabama farmboy who lost a leg in the explosion of a defective shell in Vietnam has been awarded $600,000 on the premise that a soldier has the same right to a safe product as other consumers.

The award was made in Manhattan Federal Court Friday to Dorman Baird, 28, of Gadsden, Ala., who lost his left leg and suffered other injuries in September, 1969, at Chou Lai.

ANNE RANDOLPH HEARST, 19, sister of fugitive newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst, will report to a San Francisco probation officer for the next four months as a result of her guilty plea to possession of amphetamines. Miss Hearst was placed on probation Friday by U.S. district court Judge John T. Curtin, in Buffalo, N.Y., who told her she made a "stupid mistake" by accepting pills to help her stay awake during a cross-country drive last March.

Gardeners Keep Lawn Hopping

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — A report by Dale Parnell, community colleges chancellor, titled "dollar-stretching activities within the district," pays tribute to the money-saving dedication of a zealous crew of gardeners who work for meals alone.

The gardeners are small and furry and unlikely to organize a union to press for wages. They are wild rabbits, hundreds of them, who keep the lawns of Miramar College well manicured.

The college has not had to mow its football field-sized lawn for a year, said Fred Ruane, the campus' night custodian and it "looks like a manicured golf course."

WILL CONTESTED, EXHUMING ORDERED

MOUNT CLEMMENS, Mich. (AP) — A judge has ordered the exhumation of a man, who left his $26-million estate to a nurse and three dogs, to determine whether he was mentally competent when he made out his will.

Probate Judge Kenneth Sanborn of Macomb County ordered an autopsy Friday after a nephew and two nieces of Sumner Lamkins contended that a 1968 will in which they were listed as heirs should be recognized over one made in 1972.

Physicians who testified for the relatives said medical evidence could determine if Lamkins was suffering from any brain disorder at the time the will was drafted in 1972.

Audience Tippling —Actress

TORONTO (UPI) — British actress Elizabeth Shepherd Friday lashed out at over-drinking by a Canadian audience who attended the open-ign night of an annual Shaw Festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

"Their wits were certainly not at their sharpest," she said. "It was extremely disappointing."

Earlier, Shepherd was quoted as saying: "It was the worst and most insensitive audience I have ever played to. One got the sense that part of the audience was inebriated. You could smell the stuff coming across the stage.

"If we (the performers) can contain ourselves until after the show, so can the audience.

"It was not an evening blessed by happiness. We were up there on stage trying to do the best we could and the audience apparently couldn't have cared less."

Shepherd, who came to North America in 1965, stars as Eliza Doolittle in Pygmalion, opening production in the four-month season of Bernard Shaw plays.

Ex-RCMP Ride Herd On Debtors

VANCOUVER (CP)—A debt collection agency staffed mainly by retired RCMP officers has been established by the provincial government to deal with people who don't pay their provincial fines.

The collection agency is a branch of the attorney-general's department called the civil enforcement of fines division.

It started operating in Vancouver just over three weeks ago and has already collected more than $700 in fines owing on violations of provincial statues.

The division, which does not deal with Criminal Code matters, was created because of changes last year in the Summary Convictions Act.

Under the revised legislation, judges normally cannot jail persons convicted of breaking provincial or municipal laws. If offenders default on their fines, they must be sued in civil court for debt.

Lorne Newson, chief enforcement officer for the division, said people who can pay their fines but haven't done so will be taken to small claims court if they do not comply with the requests of his staff.

If he refuses to pay at that stage, he can be ordered by the court to be jailed for up to 10 days. He also could be billed the $20-a-day cost of incarceration in addition to the fine.

Newson, who retired as an RCMP sergeant in 1974 after 20 years' service in B.C., said the division will endeavor to be compassionate with persons having genuine difficulty in paying their fines and will probably only go the jail route with stubborn defaulters who are able to pay.

Newson said he doubts the money collected by the division will meet the cost of collecting it. "We will be prepared to spend a reasonable number of man hours in some cases to collect even the smallest of fines because we cannot leave the impression with people who would exploit a given situation that there would be no effort to enforce a judgment against them."

However, Newson added, the new system should create a saving because it will still be considerably less expensive than the old system of immediately incarcerating persons who left their fines unpaid.

Newson's staff consists of administrative personnel and three enforcement officers who are old retired RCMP staff sergeants.

The enforcement officers are Nelson Hindle, who wound up his 28-year career with the RCMP in Chilliwack, Bud Domay, who was last stationed as a staff sergeant in North Vancouver, and Norm Adolph, latterly of Prince Rupert.

Newson said there is only about $1,000 owing in unpaid bylaw fines in Vancouver, while a rough estimate of monies owing in the Lower Mainland in unpaid fines relating to provincial laws has been put at more than $150,000.

The new division comes under the Justice Development Commission and will be co-ordinated with other government services.

Alta. Budget Bonanza For Elderly

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta senior citizens have been guaranteed the highest minimum monthly income given to the elderly in Canada and taxpayers in the oil-rich province have been promised the lowest personal provincial income taxes in the country.

The moves are contained in the Progressive Conservative government's 1975-76 budget tabled in the legislature Friday night, a $2.536-billion spending program essentially the same as the pre-election budget, earlier this year. The budget brought down prior to the March 26 election, in which the Conservatives swept 69 of 75 legislative seats, died on the order paper when the vote was called.

The major change is the provision that single pensioners over the age of 65 who get the federal old-age pension and income supplement will be guaranteed a $255 minimum income for individuals, but the government reviewed that level during and after the election campaign.

Provincial Treasurer Merv Leitch, presenting his first budget since taking over the portfolio from Gordon Miniely in a post-election cabinet shuffle, said senior citizens in the provicne will get an "appreciably higher level of support" than their counterparts in other provinces. Spokesmen in his department said the $240 guarantee in B.C. was the highest before Alberta boosted its level.

The elderly will also benefit through an $18-million program of extended health-care benefits and increases in renter assistance grants.

Indians Occupy Offices

NANAIMO (CP) — A group of native Indians Friday occupied the offices of the federal department of Indian affairs, about 20 to 30 of them peacefully watching educational films while another 10 or 15 carried placards outside.

Department staff left the offices shortly after the natives arrived in the offices, the second time this month they have conducted a sit-in.

The move is part of a province-wide move to get the provincial and federal governments to negotiate native land claims.

Meanwhile in Ottawa Indian Affairs Minister Judd Buchanan said he is sympathetic to demands by B.C. Indian bands for greater responsibility over their own affairs.

He told a news conference he would be ready to go to B.C. late next month and discuss what new areas the Indians might take over from Indian affairs employees.

B.C. GOV'T STUDY IN VANCOUVER

Food Probe Launched

VANCOUVER (CP) — The provincial government-appointed British Columbia Advisory Food Council has launched an investigation into food costs and pricing in the greater Victoria area.

Wayne Wickens, council secretary, said Friday it would be conducted by Robin Smith Consultants Ltd. of Richmond and "will involve a study of what happens to the food after it leaves the farm. What the raw product costs, storage costs, packaging costs, retail labor costs, interest on investment and so on."

He said commodities to be studied are beef, pork, chicken, turkey, eggs, milk. It will include how prices for these commodities are arrived at when sold to area consumers.

He said the investigation is an information study and the preliminary report is expected to be ready in about two months.

The study resulted from a meeting earlier this month between Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich and food industry officials, who told the minister they were worried about labor demands in B.C. processing firms.

The producers said that recent wage settlements in the industry have provided for wage increases of up to 80 per cent over two years with fringe benefits that were equivalent to as much as 30 cents an hour.

They warned that increased wages would mean a reduction in processing of labor-intensive crops such as fresh fruit, and if this happened, foods produced by B.C. would be replaced by products from other areas.

The said the 1974 comparative average wages for the fruit and vegetable processing industry in Canada showed B.C. paid the highest wage of $3.95 an hour, compared with a national average of $3.60.

Bruce Wisbey, vegetable horticulturist for the B.C. department of agriculture, said farmers normally under contract for some firms have not planted because of uncertainty about contract disputes in the industry.

He estimated this year's pea crop could be reduced by as much as 30 per cent, from the 22.1 million pounds, worth $2.1 million, produced last year.

He said some farmers, who did not wait for the contract to be settled, planted other crops. He said it now is too late to plant peas for this year.

Jim Rankin, B.C. manager of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, said it will be early next year before the full effect of problems in the processing industry are known.

He said the effects would be felt "in communities in the valley, through reduced earnings by farmers, canning firms (and) transportation companies."

Postal Deficit $370M?

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office estimates it will have a deficit of $370.9 million in the fiscal year 1975-76, compared with an estimated deficit of $255.6 million in 1974-75.

Information tabled in the Commons Friday by Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey said the 1975-76 budget for the department includes provisions for salary increases of $41.73 million. For 1974-75, the provisions for salay increases is $12.97 million.

The salary increase provisions are based on treasury board instructions to compute salary increases of five per cent for 1974-75 and seven per cent for 1975-76 for increases not covered by collective agreements.

The post office's deficit has increased steadily in the last 10 years, the reply shows.

It was $10.9 million in 1964-65, $67.2 million in 1967-68 and $177.2 million in 1972-73.

The development came as the chairman of the federal public service staff relations board said a conciliator will be appointed to deal with a contract dispute between the Canadian union of Postal Workers and the post office.

The union, representing 22,000 postal clerks and mail sorters, had asked the board for appointment of a conciliator to bring the parties together to the bargaining table.

Finkelman said in a news release government negotiators say they have no objection to the appointment of a conciliator.

The conciliator will face a big job. None of the classes of a new contract have been agreed to as yet and there have been few meetings between the parties.

The union says the only issue the government has responded to is wages. Government officials say the union's insistence that employees suspended from their jobs in Montreal be reinstated has delayed talks.

The postal workers have asked for a $3.26-an-hour increase in a one-year contract, while the government has offered $1.15 an hour in four stages over 32 months. The average hourly wage now is $4.59.

Joe Davidson, president of the 22,000-member union, said he believed the bouts of "Mackasey flu" would diminish during the weekend as a result of the announcement. The walkout "flu" is named after Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey.

B.C. Tel Lines Protest 'Stall'

The B.C. Federation of Telephone Workers set up informational picket lines at B.C. Tel offices across the province today, including a 60-strong picket line in Victoria, to protest what a union official called B.C. Tel's "stalling tactics" in signing a contract.

The picket lines, which went up at 10 a.m. today and were taken down at noon, were strictly for informational purposes and were manned by off-duty telephone workers, Jack Sambrooke, president of the 750-member Victoria local, said today.

Sambrooke said the same sort of action could continue next week.

The 10,000 telephone workers in B.C. are "dissatisfied", Sambrooke said, with B.C. Telephone Co's inaction in signing a recently-negotiated contract.

The contract, based on federal conciliation commissioner Hugh Ladner's report, was accepted in principle by both sides in early April.

The contract provides for an 18.5 per cent wage increase this year and a 14 per cent increase during the second year of the contract.

Sambrooke said the union got what it considered an acceptable contract, but there were numerous details that had to be worked out after the conciliation report was accepted in principle.

"The company and the union met to iron out these details, but now they've been ironed out," Sambrooke said.

"We are waiting to sign the contract."

The company apparently wants to postpone signing until one of the contract details, which will be taken to an arbitration board, is cleared up.

Sambrooke said the outstanding issue concerns classifications for some clerical employees "and it is not going to affect the contract that much."

The union wants the contract signed now so it can operate under the better layoff provisions spelled out in the new contract.

"There are definitely things we require that are under the new contract," he said.

The union is actually in a legal strike position, but Sambrooke said no strike action will be taken.

He stressed the picket lines in B.C. today were only for information and said all union members were reporting for their regular shifts and people on the picket lines in B.C. today were only for information and said all union members were reporting for their regular shifts and people on the picket lines were not attempting to persuade anyone from entering the B.C. Tel offices.

"We're not going to give the company any excuse to lock us out," he said.

B.C. Tel officials could not be reached for comment.

Two Killed

Two young Victoria women, believed to be in their teens, were killed when a car struck a power pole in the 800 block Esquimalt Friday night. The male driver of the car is in Victoria General Hospital in poor condition.

Esquimalt police have declined to release details of the accident.

METCHOSIN BEAR SEEN

"It was as big as a chesterfield," she said. "I slammed the window down and he made off. I have heard of bears up north, but never thought I would see one in this area."

A fish and wildlife warden was called but the bear could not be found. It was last seen heading in the direction of Matheson Lake.

Bakery Workers' Union Votes to Strike Weston

VANCOUVER (CP) — Members of the Bakery Workers' Union, Local 468, seeking an $18,964 annual salary, have voted 80-to-5 to strike at Weston Bakeries.

The union said Friday the vote was a sign of strength that the union is prepared to test the newly-formed B.C. Food Industry Labor Relations Council which represents most retail, wholesale and manufacturing outlets in B.C.

High Comber, union secretary-treasurer and chief negotiator, said a negotiating session is scheduled with the council Tuesday, three days after expiry of their contract with the bakeries in the Greater Vancouver and Victoria areas.

"We are just taking a strike vote at the one plant," Comber said in an inerview. "If the talks break off next week we'll be serving 72-hour strike notice at Weston's.

"Then we will find out how strong they are on the basis of whether they lock out at the other operations."

The food council also includes McGavin-Toastmaster and Mrs. Willman's baking.

Comber estimated a strike-lockout would take 75 per cent of the bread off the market in the Vancouver area. He said bakery workers have turned down a 12.4-per-cent general increase offered by the council.

There are Bakery Workers' Union members in Victoria at Safeway, Weston's, and MacGavin-Toastmaster (McDonald's), all involved in the current negotiations.

Law Stands Behind Individual, Rulings Show

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

The first three decisions handed down by boards of inquiry under the provincial Human Rights Code show that the law in B.C. stands behind the rights of all individuals, Human Rights Branch directors Kathleen Ruff said Friday.

The boards of inquiry, set up under the Human Rights Code in October, 1974, to rule on cases of alleged discrimination, handed down their decisions on three separate cases this week, the first three cases ruled on since the legislation has been in effect.

Ruff said the decisions, which rule in favor of the complainants in each case, point out that landlords and employers do have the legitimate right under the law to select good tenants and employees but that the law also requires that each person be considered on his or her own merits, without prejudice.

"People have a right under the law to be free from discrimination and those rights can't just be cast aside because the law stands behind those rights," she said.

Probably the most remarkable of the three cases dealt with a single parent mother in Burnaby who was refused rent of a home because the owners said a woman could not handle the upkeep of the large garden.

"It actually came out during the hearing that the woman had two lawnmowers and gardening tools and had received praise from previous landlords for her upkeep of the garden," Ruff said.

The five-member board of inquiry ruled that the woman had been discriminated against and awarded her a nominal damage sum of $25.

Ruff said the amount of the award was small because the woman said she was not interested in any compensation "only that the injustice be brought out."

The board has the power to award costs to a person who has been discriminated against and in cases of "wanton" discrimination can award damages of up to $5,000, Ruff said.

She said the case is probably the first in Canada to deal with discrimination against a single mother.

Rude Remarks Agitate Rugby Oldsters

Crying "cheap politics," all those rugby-playing Oliver Hardys are inviting Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen and Ald. Mike Young to take part in their weekly training sessions.

And I believe it's up to them both to accept the invitation.

Of course, both of them almost certainly won't accept. But they've stuck their necks out with statements that are inaccurate, misleading and in poor taste. And I think they have to do something to make up for those statements.

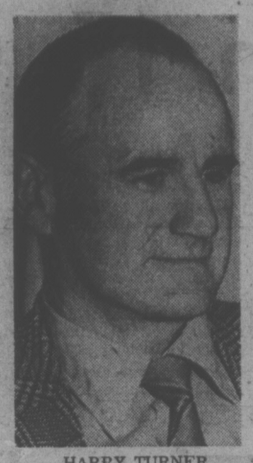
It all erupted during last week's city council debate when Young accused the finance committee of helping "pot-bellied" politicians play rugby while giving only niggardly assistance to junior golfers.

The committee had recommended that a $200 grant be given to the Royal Canadian Golf Association, to defray organization costs for the Canadian junior and juvenile golf championships to be played at Gorge Vale Golf Club Aug. 26 to 30. The association had asked for $500 and Young wanted to know why only half that sum was recommended for approval.

Young recalled that earlier this year the council had handed over $250 to the Ebb Tide Rugby Football Club, a group of "prosperous, pot-bellied businessmen and politicians," to help the club host an over-40 match and tour by the visiting Fuwakw Club of Japan.

That was just a weekend visit, said Young, yet the city was proposing to give an equal amount to a national sporting event lasting an entire week and attracting more than 70 young participants.

Mayor Pollen joined in the fray with a stab at portly rugby-playing Premier Dave Barrett when he said the purpose of the support for the rugby club was "to try to knock some sense into one of its members."



HARRY TURNER
. . . players agitated

"It was a total waste of money," Pollen added.

Anyway, Young made his point — at the expense of the members of the Ebb Tide Club. Council approved the full $500 grant for the golfers.

That's fine. The rugby oldsters don't object to that. They've got nothing against golf and nothing against youth. But they are upset about the slur against them. And I don't blame them.

Both Victoria Rugby Union president Don Burgess and Ebb Tide Club president and team captain Harry Turner were furious about the remarks. And both have written strong letters to the council.

Points out Burgess, an extremely active 43-year-old schoolteacher: "the ill-chosen comments attributed to Mayor Pollen and his would-be successor Ald. Mike Young were quite unfortunate and only demonstrate further our national apathy toward physical activity at any age level.

"In an era in which only two to three per cent of the Canadian population takes part in some form of weekly physical conditioning, it is rather sad that our inert senior city officials choose to take cheap shots at our premier and at the same time disparage the efforts of the over-40 Ebb Tide members.

"The Ebb Tide contribution to local rugby has been very considerable and goes far beyond a weekend visit by 64 members of the Fuwaku Club of Japan, who incidentally contributed the better part of $10,000 to local hotels and merchants during their three-day stay."

Turner, a 48-year-old deputy commissioner in the B.C. government's superannuation branch, says all those associated with the Ebb Tide Club "are extremely agitated" over the rude remarks.

"It is alarming that elected officials can be so irresponsible in making derogative statements about Victoria area taxpayers to support council arguments," he says.

Apart from the "rudeness" there were a lot of other things wrong with Young's remarks.

For one thing, Premier Barrett isn't a member of the Ebb Tide Club. In fact, he plays for a similar club in Vancouver. And, as Turner points out, there are no politicians playing and "we do not participate in politics."

I don't know about abounding prosperity, but a look down the club membership list shows few businessmen. There are teachers, carpenters and electricians. And there's a librarian, and a lineman with B.C. Hydro. And so on.

"The Ebb Tide (over-40) Rugby Club played 22 games last season against league, junior representative and high school teams," points out Turner. "Our membership consists of former rugby players over 40 years of age from all walks of life, including businessmen, who are concerned about their physical fitness."

DON BURGESS
. . . national apathy

"Our organization is doing something, not talking, about the deplorable physical condition of middle-aged Canadians. The physical fitness of a 30-year-old Canadian is reported to be equivalent to that of a 60-year-old Swede."

Turner, who has been president of the Victorian Rugby Union and chairman of the Referees Association, started playing again when the club was formed in 1972. Then he weighed in at 210 pounds and now he has trimmed that, "simply through the involvement with physical activity," to 182 pounds.

"We are very serious about this thing," Turner says. "We have another Japanese team coming over in April, 1976, and in September, '76, a B.C. over-40 team will tour Britain. These matches are of a pretty high calibre.

"Right now we're getting correspondence from Argentina, France, Germany, South Africa and the United Kingdom, showing interest in our over-40 program."

Ebb Tide, like other rugby clubs, has no sponsors and, as Turner points out, requested financial assistance from the city only when staging an international event.

"Our own 49 members personally contributed $1,574 solely for the purpose of entertaining the Japanese party," he says. "We appreciated the concern of the City Fathers and the grant of $250 nearly covered the rental of Royal Athletic Park of $294.35."

"The city council need not have approved our grant, but once it had done so, we would have assumed that it was made in the sincere intention of assisting our organization."

The rugby tour was an international event extended over a period of 11 days in B.C., including three days in Victoria, "during which 64 Japanese and 49 Victorians took part," says Turner.

The Ebb Tide-Fuwaku match in Victoria drew about 500 and the standard of rugby was high.

Statements like those of Young can only hurt the club's bid to get public support for future matches. An apology is called for. But then, the men of the council could go down and learn the true facts the hard way.

In a letter to the editor of the Times, Turner invites Young to attend the workouts and says "I am sure that many of us would like to show him how active a 'pot-bellied businessman' can be."

And Burgess says the Ebb Tide players would, "I am sure," provide adequate medical assistance should either of them (Pollen or Young) not be able to stand the pace."

So how about it Mayor Pollen and Ald. Young? Feel like putting your boots where your mouths are?

John Howard Society Strapped

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

The future of the John Howard Society of Vancouver Island has never looked bleaker.

Strapped for money, largely foresaken by its erstwhile supporter the United Way, and with a depleted staff, the society faces the most critical period in its 30-plus year history.

According to its president, Margaret Heseltine, the society will make one last-ditch effort to convince the government and community funding bodies that its financial problems are real and serious; failing that it will either have to fold or consider amalgamating with the John Howard Society of B.C.

Since the beginning of 1973 the fortunes of the Vancouver Island society, dedicated to helping the Island's prison inmates, have gone steadily downhill.

In March of that year it suffered a double blow. First its executive director Michael Bennett resigned to take a job at William Head federal prison. Then the United Way announced it was stopping core funding and would only ensure grants for specific projects.

Bennett has never been replaced, leaving the society without executive direction. And in the past two years the United Way has made only two grants to the society — one for $6,000 towards Conarts, a store selling hobbycrafts made by William Head inmates, and the other for $1,250 for public information and education.

Although the provincial government has more than doubled its grants to offset the loss in United Way support, there is a catch. In the transition, the government this year gave notive all funds would come through the corrections branch and would be based on a 20-per-cent increase in the amount the society had received the year before from the provincial secretariat. The catch is a grant which had been funded through the department of human resources to operate the Campbell River area council of the society was simply cut off.

"Instead of getting more we're now going to be getting less," Miss Heseltine said in an interview Friday.

In 1974 the provincial grants totalled $51,000. This year the provincial grant is $48,900, and instead of being dispensed in a lump sum will be issued in three equal payments at four-month intervals.

The society's administrative secretary, Mrs. June Young, said the budget this year though "pared down to the absolute minimum" still has come to $73,000.

It includes $15,000 for the Campbell River council, $13,500 for the council in Nanaimo and $14,632 for the one in Victoria. In addition there is $33,000 for administrative costs.

The budget allows for a community planner this year who would act as director of the society's activities.

But because of its precarious financial state the society has held off advertising the position.

Miss Heseltine said the budget has taken into consideration federal funding which last year amounted to $17,635. However, there is still no guarantee Ottawa will come through with another grant this year.

The difference between what the society receives from the two levels of government and its budget requirements will have to be made up by community funding sources, Mrs. Young said.

United Way won't fund operating costs. And yet John Howard Society, because it is a member of the United Way, cannot, as a condition of its membership, directly solicit funds on its own from the community to cover operating expenses.

The lack of funds has resulted in a steady attrition of personnel. Whereas the Victoria office of the society once had five paid employees — a director, two case workers and two secretaries — it now has only one, Mrs. Young. She is trying to cover all roles but it's an impossible task.

Miss Heseltine said the society has been reduced to an answering service, a referral agency. Many of the programs they would like to be involved in have had to be set aside for the time being.

The answer may lie in amalgamation with the John Howard Society of B.C. from which the Island group broke away in the early 40's over differences among members of the board of directors. Miss Heseltine said she welcomes negotiations but is not committed to amalgamation until she learns what proposals the B.C. group will make.

As if the society's financial problems are not bad enough it is now beginning to feel the squeeze from government — both federal and provincial — which is starting to take over many of the services John Howard has traditionally provided.

Society members have approached the government for suggestions on what their new role should be. So far the government has indicated a need for counselling services at the Wilkinson Road remand centre and help in establishing community residential centres.

"We should have one more try," Miss Heseltine said. "We must resolve amalgamation or try to get a director to see if we can't develop innovative schemes.

"If time shows there is no longer a need for the John Howard Society then I am not one to perpetuate something not wanted.

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

Cross-examination of a key crown witness resumed Friday following submission to B.C. Supreme Court of a signed statement in which Curtis William Christie admitted to stabbing Stanford Clarence Wray, 53, last Oct. 15

Questioning of Donald Charles McCrae was halted earlier in the week following which defence counsel Doug Christie withdrew and was replaced by Dr. J. J. Gow.

Christie, 19, is accused of murder punishable by life imprisonment in the death of Wray. The case is being heard by Mr. Justice Harry McKay and a jury.

McCrae, an admitted seller and user of heroin, testified Tuesday that he lent Christie a knife similar to one introduced as evidence at the trial. Both men had been drinking at the Century Inn beer parlor.

When cross-examination resumed Friday, McCrae agreed that heroin affects judgment and memory, that he had taken three or four caps of heroin that day, and that the combined effect of heroin and alcohol is fairly powerful.

You had a fair amount to drink that evening, asked Gow.

"You could say that, yes," replied McCrae.

By 1 a.m. you had drunk so much you were affected by it?

"You could say that, yes."

Dealing with the knife, Gow asked if Christie didn't tell McCrae he wanted it as protection because he wanted to collect a debt owing him.

"No, he wanted to go and roll a drunk, that is what he wanted a knife for."

Gow then referred to McCrae's earlier testimony in which he said Christie had left the Century Inn beer parlor once and he thought he had "gone to collect his money."

That means to collect something that was his?

"That is not the way I meant it. The guy could have owed the money, I don't know."

You said at the preliminary hearing he borrowed the knife to collect a debt?

"Yes."

Was the answer true and correct?

"I guess not," replied McCrae, adding he was coming off methadone at the time.

Asked again if it was a truthful answer, he said "to the best of my ability at the time, yes."

And the reason you used the phrase "gone to collect his money" in the B.C. Supreme Court trial this week was because Christie told you he wanted to collect a debt, as you told the court at the preliminary heaing?

"It's possible but I don't think so."

You thought so at the preliminary hearing, didn't you?

"You could say that, I guess."

It was the truth then?

"To the best of my ability.'

McCrae agreed that the phrase "roll a drunk" means to rob him. He also agreed that the phrase is often said jokingly.

Earlier Friday, evidence was given of a police interview and a signed statement by Christie, Oct. 15 and 16 in which he confessed to stabbing Wray in the chest with a knife while they were in a car stopped at Fernwood and Grant.

Christie said he had been drinking at the King's Hotel and Century Inn beer parlors and left the latter at closing time "with the old man" who was "looking for a girl and I knew a party where there would be some."

Wray stopped the car, started punching him, grabbed his hair and threatened him.

Christie said he tried punching the man but kept hitting the steering wheel, then took out the knife and "I poked him, I don't know where. I just knew it was in. I felt a jerk in my hand. I pulled it out."

He ran ran round to the driver's side, took the man's shirt off and said "let's go down to my place." (Christie lived at 1303 Gladstone, two blocks away).

He laid Wray down on Grant Street, checked for a heartbeat and there was none. "I panicked, grabbed the sweater and ran, to my apartment."

He remembered taking Wray's wallet but there was no money in it.

"I didn't mean to kill him or stab him. I was going to try to help him. I mean, or I wouldn't have tried to help him after, if I tried to kill him or if I wanted to kill him."

City detective Douglas Richardson said Christie told him he didn't have the knife to use on Wray but to collect some money a person owed him who had a friend "who packs a gun. I had the knife for self-protection."

Christie said, according to Richardson, that the money was owing from a drug sale.

Detective Blake Green agreed under cross-examination that he had said Christie couldn't free himself from the struggle with Wray.

Gow suggested that Christie said he couldn't get free from Wray and in trying to get free the stabbing occurred.

Green replied that his notes show Christie saying ". . . I tried to break loose but he was too strong."

At the start of Friday's session, Gow said he and the crown had agreed on the form of admission of facts.

He told the jury this is provided for in the Criminal Code, that, where an accused is on trial, he or his counsel may admit any fact for the purpose of dispensing with proof.

On Christie's instructions, these admission of fact were made:

—That, on or about the night of Oct. 14, Christie was at the beer parlor of the Century Inn;

—That Christie, while at this beer parlor Oct. 14, borrowed a knife from McCrae;

—That Christie, on the morning of Oct. 15, did stab Wray in the chest with a knife borrowed from McCrae and thereby did kill Wray.

The trial will continue Monday

Up, Up And . . . Oops

Two young men who tried to steal a private float plane from the Victoria Flying Services dock opposite the legislative buildings in the Inner Harbor Friday afternoon didn't get very far.

Spotting the key left in the ignition they climbed into the plane, started the engine and were about to taxi away when they realized they hadn't cast off the mooring line.

The men, described as between 18 and 22, leapt from the plane and ran off. Wintell gave chase but lost them as they fled west along Belleville.

Victoria police were unable to locate the suspects.

Winery Plans Retail Store

Victoria's only winery will take advantage of new provincial legislation to establish its own plant retail store for direct sales to the public.

But a spokesman for Castle Wines Ltd. at 3948 Quadra warned wine lovers Friday not to raise their hopes that this bypassing regular liquor outlets will result in cheaper wine products.

Manager Bob Holt said as far as he's aware the regulations governing in-plant stores have yet to be drafted, but he suspects the government may fix a uniform retail price across the province, "whether they are selling it or not."

Holt also said the company plans to offer guided tours around the plant and offer visitors wine samples, as permitted by the new legislation.

"But as far as things to see, one should bear in mind that a winery is substantially a tank farm and a warehouse," he said.

Although bottling is in progress throughout the year, he thought the fall season would be the peak time for tours, when crushing is in full swing.

A full refurbishing of the plant is now under way, Holt said, and a suitable area has been earmarked as a "host room and retail outlet."

Boy, 2, Dies Of Injuries

Saanich police said the child was attempting to cross the road when he was hit by car driven by Elizabeth Laronde, 54, of 4034 Hollydene.

Coroner Edmond St. Jorre has not advised whether he intends to hold an inquest or inquiry into the fatality.

Oak Bay Presented $5,000

An eight foot long by three foot high plywood cheque for $5,000 was presented to Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith as part of the Oak Bay Tea Party opening ceremonies today.

The money, raised by the Oak Bay Kiwanis Club, will be used by the municipality to buy "amenities" for Oak Bay's new recreation centre, a club spokesman said.

The club spokesman said the Kiwanis will have discussions later with the recreation commission on exactly what amenities will be bought.

Gilmour Appointed In Taxi Dispute

Provincial mediator Clark Gilmour has been appointed to mediate the contract dispute between the C and C Transportation Co. and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers Union.

C and C, Victoria's only union taxi company, employs about 50 drivers. The first meeting between the company, the union and Gilmour will be held June 9, union business agent Jim Grealy said.

Gilmour will also sit as mediator in a dispute between the CBRT and the provincially-owned Vancouver Island Coach Lines. The CBRT represents 150 office staff and drivers of the bus line.

The mediation talks in that dispute will start June 11.

No X-Ray, Transfusion When She Graduated

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

When Mrs. May Stewart was a nurse in the operating rooms of the old St. Joseph's Hospital, there were no such things as x-ray pictures and blood transfusions.

That was back around 1910, just after Mrs. Stewart graduated from the St. Joseph's School of Nursing. As the oldest living graduate, she will be on hand next weekend when the school celebrates its 75th anniversary.

The three-day celebration — June 5 to 7 — is pulling close to 650 graduates back to mark the occasion, Mrs. Maria Kissinger, one of the organizers, said Friday.

There will be teas, including one at Government House, and tours and an artifacts display and a lot of reminiscing which begins with "remember when . . ."

Mrs. Stewart, now 87, remembers when she was taking her training, the hospital, now known as Victoria General, was building the portion known as X wing, a grey stone section with its broad entrance steps onto Humboldt Street.

The hospital was founded and operated for many years by the Sisters of St. Ann and Mrs. Stewart remembers kindly her instructors, including the late Sister Mary Peter, known as "the old warrior."

STEWART
. . . remembers when

The school's former graduates are coming from right across Canada, from the U.S., Australia and possibly Norway. Many will be staying with graduates living locally or old friends.

A welcoming tea Thursday at the nursing school will be opened by Sister Mary Armella, a sister of Sister Mary Gertrude, founder of the school.

Memorabilia, including old uniforms and treasured photos, will be on display and there will be a wine and cheese party after the annual meeting Thursday night.

A tour Friday morning will include the provincial museum, Helmcken House, home of the pioneer doctor and the historic school house built over a century ago by the Sisters of St. Ann.

Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen and Mrs. Owen will welcome graduates at a tea Friday afternoon.

On Saturday there will be tours of the hospital and nursing school and a banquet at The Empress in the evening.

Ask The Times

Q. Can you tell me the name of the lovely, tiny mauve flowers seen at this time of the year on boulevards in the Uplands. Where can I purchase some seed.— A.C.C.

A. The name of the flower is Slender Speedwell (veronica filiformis). Some people treat it as a weed, but others consider it too pretty to eradicate. The plant originates from the Mediterranean but was probably introduced from Britain for a rock garden. It does not produce any seeds but propagates itself vegetively. That, is, when the plant is cut some of the pieces root themselves.

Guide Dog Trips Man, Fall Restores Sight

"I am absolutely thrilled," said Jon Lawrence, 43, a telephone operator at Maidstone, southeast of London. He said he began going blind seven years ago from complications of a slow-developing eye ailment and arthritis and had been completely blind for four years.

"I had just taken a cup of tea up to my wife and daughter," he told reporters Friday. "Omar, my guide dog, was leaping about at the bottom of the stairs and I tripped over him; fell down three or four steps and landed with a bump, banging the back of my head.

"My daughter Janette rushed down and I asked her if she was wearing a pink nightie. She was."

"When I fell I cursed the dog," Lawrence said. "'You horrible hound,' I yelled at him. But he gave me back my sight."

Omar will have to be returned to the organization that trains guide dogs for the blind.

"I'll be sorry," Lawrence said. "He's a wonderful dog." He got a steak as a bonus.

EUGENE, Ore. — Steve Prefontaine, the U.S. premier distance runner and the holder of seven American records, was drunk when he died in the crash of his sports car, an autopsy showed.

The colorful and controversial Prefontaine, 24, was alone in his convertible Friday when it veered over the center line of a Eugene street, jumped a curb, smashed into a stone embankment and flipped over, pinning him beneath the vehicle.

LONDON — Stuntman Evel Knievel had a visit in hospital Friday from film actress Ann-Margret who told him America wants him to carry on jumping.

The actress paid the get-well visit in return for a special trip Knievel made to Las Vegas for the comeback show after her recovery from serious injuries suffered in a 22-foot fall on stage.

PETERBOROUGH, Ont. — David Lewis said Friday he is stepping down, but he is not stepping out.

"I wouldn't be permitted to retire even if I wanted to," the federal NDP leader told a crowd of 400 gathered to honor members of the Lewis political family.

Lewis, 69, who lost his seat in parliament in the 1974 general election, said he will retire from the party leadership but will continue to write, speak and work for the party.

"I will work for the NDP until I physically can no longer do so," he said.

MONTREAL — Dr. Henry Morgentaler was taken to a Montreal hospital Tuesday, apparently suffering a heart attack, two days after his trial began on charges of having performed an illegal abortion, his lawyer revealed Friday.

Claude-Armand Sheppard said the 52-year-old doctor complained he had pains in his chest and was feeling dizzy. He was examined at the emergency ward and was returned to the Parthenais detention centre Tuesday night.

DUBLIN — English heiress Dr. Rose Dugdale has ended her 34-day hunger strike in Limerick Jail, prison officials said Friday.

Dr. Dugdale, daughter of an English millionaire, is serving a nine-year sentence in connection with last year's $20 million art theft from diamond millionaire Sir Alfred Beit. She went on the hunger strike in protest against alleged withholding of her mail.

NEW YORK — An Alabama farmboy who lost a leg in the explosion of a defective shell in Vietnam has been awarded $600,000 on the premise that a soldier has the same right to a safe product as other consumers.

The award was made in Manhattan Federal Court Friday to Dorman Baird, 28, of Gadsden, Ala., who lost his left leg and suffered other injuries in September, 1969, at Chou Lai.

ANNE RANDOLPH HEARST, 19, sister of fugitive newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst, will report to a San Francisco probation officer for the next four months as a result of her guilty plea to possession of amphetamines. Miss Hearst was placed on probation Friday by U.S. district court Judge John T. Curtin, in Buffalo, N.Y., who told her she made a "stupid mistake" by accepting pills to help her stay awake during a cross-country drive last March.

Gardeners Keep Lawn Hopping

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — A report by Dale Parnell, community colleges chancellor, titled "dollar-stretching activities within the district," pays tribute to the money-saving dedication of a zealous crew of gardeners who work for meals alone.

The gardeners are small and furry and unlikely to organize a union to press for wages. They are wild rabbits, hundreds of them, who keep the lawns of Miramar College well manicured.

The college has not had to mow its football field-sized lawn for a year, said Fred Ruane, the campus' night custodian and it "looks like a manicured golf course."

WILL CONTESTED, EXHUMING ORDERED

MOUNT CLEMMENS, Mich. (AP) — A judge has ordered the exhumation of a man, who left his $26-million estate to a nurse and three dogs, to determine whether he was mentally competent when he made out his will.

Probate Judge Kenneth Sanborn of Macomb County ordered an autopsy Friday after a nephew and two nieces of Sumner Lamkins contended that a 1968 will in which they were listed as heirs should be recognized over one made in 1972.

Physicians who testified for the relatives said medical evidence could determine if Lamkins was suffering from any brain disorder at the time the will was drafted in 1972.

Audience Tippling –Actress

TORONTO (UPI) — British actress Elizabeth Shepherd Friday lashed out at overdrinking by a Canadian audience who attended the opening night of an annual Shaw Festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

"Their wits were certainly not at their sharpest," she said. "It was extremely disappointing."

Earlier, Shepherd was quoted as saying: "It was the worst and most insensitive audience I have ever played to. One got the sense that part of the audience was inebriated. You could smell the stuff coming across the stage.

"If we (the performers) can contain ourselves until after the show, so can the audience.

"It was not an evening blessed by happiness. We were up there on stage trying to do the best we could and the audience apparently couldn't have cared less."

Shepherd, who came to North America in 1965, stars as Eliza Doolittle in Pygmalion, opening production in the four-month season of Bernard Shaw plays.

When she appeared for curtain calls after the final act, she just gave the audience a cross look, spectators said.
